SHAKE-UP IN CUSTOMS HOUSE IS BEGUN

Sensational Charges Contained in Report of Special Investigators Just Filed.

Charges of a startling character against some of the employees of the Boston Customs Department are contained in the report of the special investigation made at Washington yesterday, according to the Boston Globe.

From the report received Washington, Mr. Henry H. Brown, a clerk in the United States Appraiser's Office, was discharged for alleged impropriety in duty. It was said that the discharge of Brown came as the first result of the investigation by the committee that has been in progress for two and a half months.

The discharge of the clerk, it was said, was recommended by the officials of the appraiser's office and by the investigating committee. The order for the discharge came from Washington and was signed by James T. Curtis, assistant secretary of the treasury.

Charges Called Sensational.

Mr. Curtis has charges of the customs houses throughout the country and it was he who came to Boston about the middle of October and began to investigate the conditions.

Investigation from Washington showed Mr. Curtis to be a man of great energy and that the charges in the report could be clear and certain. It was said that the report would result in the discharge of some of the employees.

First, the discharge of a number of employees, a thorough reorganization of the department.

Collectors of the Port of Boston, T. Curtis was questioned about the reported shake-up in the Boston Customs House.

He said that the report was a sensational one and that he was not at all surprised at the charges. He said that he was not at all surprised at the charges and that he was not at all surprised at the charges.

Sure to Find Loggards.

"It is not only unusual that in a working force of between 200 and 300 that one or two hundred men would be found by those who were sent to find them. As a matter of fact I do not know how many they did find, whether it was one or a dozen."

He had received no notification of what was going on in the customs house, but he said that he was not at all surprised at the charges. He said that he was not at all surprised at the charges and that he was not at all surprised at the charges.

Many Men in Fear.

Ever since the special committee reached Boston in October many of the men in the customs house have been in a nervous condition. They are now in a state of panic and are afraid of the future.

One of those who should know what the report contained, the thirty-three night inspectors will lose their jobs. They are now in a state of panic and are afraid of the future.

Systemic Catarrh Follows Grip.
Mrs. Jennie W. Cook, Big Cabin, Okla., formerly housekeeper for Indian Affairs, writes: "I had a bad case of grip. It was followed by systemic catarrh. The only thing I used was Peruna and Manly. I have been in better health for three years than for years before. I give Peruna all the credit for my cure."

ROBIN BANK FRAUD EXPOSED BY LEXOW

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—Joseph G. Brown, who worked the Northern Bank, cleared $1,000,000 and ruined 30,000 depositors and attempted suicide before going to the Criminal Courts building Friday, was sent at Bellevue today to be out of danger.

Robin ate breakfast this morning with his wife, Mrs. M. J. Brown, Goldensink, and Edder Kress, William T. Jerome's law partner, and gave pretty good evidence that his complexion, mentally and physically, is good. For a man who had been in the hospital for a week and a half the day before, he looked marvellously well.

It developed today also that the first hint of trouble in the two banks was given

Clarence Loxow, who died Friday, Mr. Loxow attended a meeting of officers of one of the Italian societies about ten days ago and his suspicions were aroused by what he heard there. He promptly passed them on to the banking department.

The American Leads Them All

ADVERTISING GAINS

Over Four Thousand Columns

IN ONE YEAR—1910

THIS is the greatest gain by far of any newspaper in the United States, east of the Rocky Mountains, and nearly two thousand columns more than any other newspaper in New England.

This magnificent showing but accords with the tremendous circulation of the AMERICAN of nearly 400,000.

And certainly no more splendid tribute was ever paid to a newspaper than that to the AMERICAN during the past year by Boston merchants who in the apportionment of their advertising appropriations not only gave a large share but, in many instances, gave the major part of their entire appropriation to the AMERICAN.

There is every logical reason for this—for with a circulation like that of the Evening AMERICAN alone—300,000 more than its next highest competitor and 100,000 more than all the other evening papers in Boston combined, a circulation that is home-going and read in the family circle at a time when advertising always receives the most careful attention—such success is inevitable.

And furthermore—no newspaper in the world, in so short a period of development as six years, has ever made the progress in both Circulation and Advertising as has the AMERICAN.

OWING to extreme backward business conditions this season, and by reason of numerous cancellations, these prominent designers and makers of high-class garments, found themselves greatly overstocked.

STALHIG LOSS TO RED SOX

The new proof lies in the fact that the Sox have lost to the Red Sox in the first game of the season, and the Sox have lost to the Red Sox in the first game of the season, and the Sox have lost to the Red Sox in the first game of the season.

SCHOOL BASKETBALL PLAYERS
TRAIN FOR LIVELY CONTESTS

Lads Practice Strenuously for the Close Games That Will Mark the New Year.

In anticipation of a slashing good season of live contests with the opening of 1911 most of the high school basketball players of Greater Boston will be seen in the gymnasium during the week for practice in the school "gym," and players on other teams that did not have practice to participate in some of the games with independent teams.

The real start of the Boston High School League season will take place this week and several league games in both divisions will be played weekly until the season closes March 1. Several of the high schools in the league expect to be strengthened this week, for the sport cards are due during the week, and it is expected that many boys who have been idle to play so far this season on account of low studies will have picked up during their effort in sports and be ready to play standing with the faculty.

NEW AUTOMOBILE PRICES

Revolutionizing Motor Car Standards

THE United States Motor Company announces a new schedule of prices, effective to-day. This announcement appears to-day in the newspapers of forty-nine cities. The automobile world—the entire reading public—will be amazed that this announcement, involving as it does lower prices for 1911 models, is made now on the eve of the New York Show, which is the signal for heavy buying of cars to begin.

We therefore earnestly request you to read every word on this page. It marks the beginning of a new epoch in motor car history—the establishment of new automobile standards—the attainment of which was only possible through the co-operation and organization realized in the formation of this company.

We manufacture one-fourth of all the motor cars made in the United States and one-sixth of all the cars made in the world. We control all our manufacturing processes.

Cars Made by United States Motor Company Organizations

Ranging in Price from $450 to $8000

BRUSH, formerly $485, is now $450

This is the standard runabout, model F.

Roadster, Model E 26, formerly $600, now with equipment extra $485

MAXWELL, 16 H. P. runabout $600

This Model A B Runabout now includes $70 equipment, consisting of top, gas lamps and generator, at the former $600 price.

Model Q, 22 H. P., 4 cylinder, formerly $900, now $750

Model I, 25 H. P., fore-door touring car, formerly $1100, equal to any car in the $1250 class, now $950

Model EA, 30 H. P., fore-door touring car, formerly $1600, equal to any car in the $1500 to $1800 class, now $1350

SAMPSON 35, touring car, a recent addition to our line, is listed at a price to command instant attention $1250 to $1325

STODDARD-DAYTON models, from $1175 to $4800

These models are all unchanged in price, but in every case show worth higher than the 1910 models. The 50 H. P. Stoddard-Dayton is distinguished by exceptional refinements.

COLUMBIA, a new model, for $3500

Higher powered and more exquisite finish at a slightly higher price than formerly.

Both Stoddard-Dayton and Columbia cars stand for the limit of motor car excellence and luxury regardless of price. No better cars can be made until the world's engineering knowledge is enlarged and the skill of its craftsmen is heightened.

BRUSH DELIVERY, formerly $685, now $650

This is the 600 pound delivery wagon.

SAMPSON DELIVERY (1000 pound wagon)

Delivery and freight motors, ranging from 1000 pounds to 20-ton road train $1150 to $8000

GRAY Marine and Stationary Engines—Recognized as standard all over the world.

18 Plants—Capacity 52,000 Cars—52 Models—14,000 Employees—34 Branches—Dealers Everywhere

THIS readjustment of values is the logical result of the original plan, policy and ideal to which the United States Motor Company owes its birth. Patiently and persistently we have worked to this end—harmonizing, organizing, specializing—always seeking to increase the efficiency of our organization, to improve the quality of our product—always with the ultimate aim in view—the attainment of an unquestioned leadership, because deserved.

The United States Motor Company is composed of 11 constituent companies—each the leader of its class. It operates eighteen separate factories, with a combined floor space of 49 acres. It employs 14,000 skilled artisans and a corps of original investigators, the benefit of whose work is shared by all the companies alike. The individual genius which built up each successful constituent company still directs it, but spurred by friendly rivalry to greater exertion. The broad plans and policies of the parent company are outlined and executed in the fulness of the combined experience of these men.

The product of these companies includes 52 different models—cars designed for every need, utility and pleasure vehicles, for passenger and freight carriage. They range in price from $450 to $8000.

OUR selling organization embraces 34 branch houses and dealers everywhere. This distribution not only enables us to dispose of our product at the lowest selling cost, but it permits us to provide a service organization to maintain these cars in the hands of owners that cannot be duplicated by any other company.

And this organization is owned by upward of a thousand stockholders scattered all over the country; is operated on a co-operative basis, with all our employees working wholeheartedly for our success and sharing in our prosperity, while the executive management is based on military discipline. No one man, no clique holds the majority of the stock. Our stock can be bought in the open market by any one, therefore "control" depends only on efficiency.

IN BUYING raw material we are able, by massing our purchases, to secure lower prices and maintain higher quality. By interchange of experience in our engineering department, we avoid costly mistakes and produce better cars. Our original investigations which produce improvements cost little when distributed over our vast product. An improvement in method is introduced immediately in all our plants.

If particular skill and equipment produces better results in one place, all work of this character is done there.

By co-operative selling it is possible for one factory to sell in places where it would otherwise be possible to sell only at a prohibitive cost. Not only does this saving benefit the purchaser, but the service that can be rendered to the owner after purchase could not be given in this locality by any other plan at any practical expense.

WE HAVE conducted this getting ready process persistently and patiently, untroubled by temporary or local conditions in the industry. While others were cutting prices to dispose of old stock or left-over cars, or to raise cash, we said nothing; we were not ready. We have now reached the point where the fruit of our effort can be given to the buyer without sacrificing the interests of our shareholders.

WE MAKE a profit at these new prices.

Had we needed to unload we would have announced them four months ago. We have no left-over cars, no old stock to work up. As a matter of fact, our shipments for three months ending November 30 were 57 1/2 per cent. greater than for the same period in 1909.

The season for the heaviest buying is now just about to open. Over ninety-five per cent. of our product is already contracted for with deposit. Every indication points to a shortage of our cars this spring.

Nevertheless, by basing our prices on a cost which is lowered by legitimate saving, made possible through the benefits of co-operative organization, we are establishing our Company, now and for all time, in public confidence and earning the support which we expect always to retain.

In the preparation of this advertisement I have been keenly interested. I have gone over every item point by point from your point of view as well as from mine. I am satisfied with it. I vouch for its truth, for the sincerity of purpose and for every single statement of fact which it contains. I commend it to your attention. I ask for your order

MY WISH FOR THE NEW YEAR THE LOVE THAT NEVER, NEVER DIES

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

WE'VE had our Mistletoe at Christmas, and never were two true hearts happier than Billy's and mine as we sat beneath it. My wish for the New Year is that never, never, NEVER, will the mistletoe-time end for Billy and me. And I just know that even when I have grown older and Billy comes home to me from his office where he has worked all day, we will greet each other in the same happy way as though the mistletoe were hanging over our heads. Resolve, on this Glad New Year, to keep Love and the Mistletoe in your lives forever.

BEST STORIES TOLD LAST WEEK IN BOSTON

One on Tenney

By Former Councilman Robert D. Sexton.

NOW that Fred Tenney has been named as the new manager of the Boston Nationals, this story concerning him seems appropriate and timely. Fred is regarded as something of a scholar, for he has continued the love of education that he felt augmented at Brown. According to the player who gave me this, Fred recently met with a certain pitcher, who, while good at putting 'em over, had but very little education. They were talking regarding a player who had developed the tendency to hit up old John Barleycorn.

"Why," exclaimed Tenney, "it's too bad to see a chap go that way. He's a dispendance."

"That's just what he is," was the reply. "That fellow would blow your brains out in a minute."

Helped the Girl

By Representative "Tim" Sheehan. ONCE in a great while I indulge in bowling a bit and the other night the custodian of the alley where I roll told this story, which I look upon as not only good in a story-telling way, but also a tribute to his worth as a man:

"I live in the South End, in fact, on Shawmut avenue," he said, "and the boys and girls up there have a sort of sidewalk language. The other day a boy of twelve or thereabouts walked just ahead of me and every few minutes he stopped and wrote upon the bricks in var-colored chalk: 'Dear Mamie Smith'."

"Now folks in the South End don't like to have their sidewalks all chalked up, particularly since that hustling improvement society got to work in the district, and the boy had hardly passed before women came out and brushed all those 'Dear Mamie Smith's' away. That caused me to do a foolish thing for a man of my age."

"I purchased chalk, green and blue and yellow, went down on my hands and knees and wrote 'Dear Mamie Smith' here and there. You can wager anything you possess that I wasn't going to have that girl disappointed when she came that way."

Couldn't Blame It

By Harry Brooks, the Original "Peck's Boy."

I HAVE been around the country a bit as an actor, and have seen something of life besides portraying it. Yet in all the hotels I have stopped in during my career I think the one that best anything else in the way of accommodations was out in an Ohio town. The company I was in put up there and as we had no other hotel to look to we just had to up and make the best of it. On account of lack of room, too, we had to do double sleep, or tried to sleep, with a chap named Bill Jameson, who was in the show. Bill was a wag for keeps. We got in among the bunkies and dozed off somehow. During the night I awoke and caught the odor of gas in the room. "Bill," I shouted, as I sprang out of bed, "wake up. The gas is escaping."

"Well, do you blame it?" he asked as he turned over and went into the land of dreams again.

Don't Try This

Howard street habitués claim this one has just started the rounds of that interesting thoroughfare.

HELLO, old chap. Say, you ought to have been along. I just got a nice drink and it didn't cost a rap.

Is that so. How did you frisk it? Well, I went into see "Tim Sheehan, at Campbell's," "Tim," says I, "let me have two glasses of misty." Tim promptly put 'em up on the bar. I drank one and left the other to settle

Wanted to Know

By a Station 2 patrolman, residing in Dorchester, proud father of six, but too retiring and modest in disposition to allow his name to appear.

SAT—I have six children. I'm not going to tell you how they are divided up as to girls, as the fellows at the station house would get wise as to who I am. One of my boys is a regular pest in the asking questions line. "What's this, pa?" "What's this, ma?" till you get riled up. Sometimes he drives me most frantic. Yet I love children, and don't you forget it. The other night he had been more pious than usual. Even my wife showed signs of giving up, and then I stunk my ear in and ordered him off to bed. His mother went up to his room, her heart torn because he cried a bit. Then I caught this conversation:

"Now, my boy, you must try not to ask so many foolish questions. Just to make you be good and so you'll go sleep right away, I'll let you ask just one more."

There was silence for about ten seconds. Then he chirped:

"Say, ma, how far can a rat spit?" Can you beat it?

"No," he answered, "but I'm certain I put one over on the pitcher."

"No," she replied, "I'll let you know that we have plenty of names left. We haven't had to start numbering them yet."

Plenty of Names

By a Boston Central Ticker. NO one can ever say that there are not some large families over in Boston. I live in that district, but I never realized it until I went round taking the census. I recall that I went to one house and asked the woman how many children she had.

"Let me see," she said, "There's Jimmy and Johnnie and Mary and Katie and Sue and Eddie and Margaret and—"

I saw that it was likely never to end so I broke in with, "Their mum her, husband?"

"Number," she replied, "I'll let you know that we have plenty of names left. We haven't had to start numbering them yet."

Just as Good

By Major Charles Rideout, President Taft's Double, of Province street.

AL LARRABIER of Hounfield street tells this one and he declares upon his honor that it's new, so if anyone claims it has grown an imperious just blame it on Al. A certain baseball fan in the South End had been importuned by his wife to take her to see a game. He complies and that night his slumbers were rudely disturbed by his wife's shouting:

"Kill the umpire! Kill the umpire!" The husband sprang out of bed half asleep and down went the washstand. The resultant crash awoke the wife.

"And you kill the umpire!" she queried.

"No," he answered, "but I'm certain I put one over on the pitcher."

Broke the Spell

By Captain Joseph C. Riley, Superintendent of Tugs at the Charlestown Navy Yard.

"It's one isn't it so bad. We hear 'em once in a great while over my way, you know. Two fellows were recently halted before the coast on the charge of cheating at cards. It was shown that a man had lost $100 or so through their machinations.

"You just stand up and state your case," said the judge, as he singled out one.

"It's just like this, Judge," said the fellow. "We met with this chap and he wanted to play cards with us. We didn't have time to play, but we did bet him a hundred that my friend here could bring two jacks out together. The pack was shuffled and the two jacks came out together by accident."

"You said your name was?"

"Jack Jones, your honor."

"And you?"

"Jack White, sir."

Then the Judge said: "Four months for Jack Jones and two months for Jack White. I'll be willing to bet almost anything that these two jacks won't come out together."

So Kind

Heard in the Subway. MY husband is good natured and generous. He's very good to all his friends. Why, do you know I gave him a box of cigars as a Christmas gift and he only got an opportunity to smoke one. The rest of them he passed out right and left among men, whom he met with add thoughts a lot of.

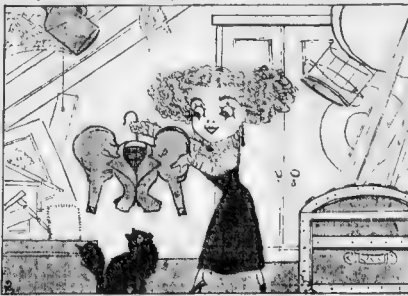

Mrs. Trixie Trix---And How She Got Her New Fur Coat

(Copyright, 1910, by American Journal Company, Great Britain & U.S.A.)

Drawn by Harry Lewis—(To Be Continued Next Sunday)

MRS. TRIXIE TRIX—Look at this lovely mink coat, John; only $165. It's just what I want. Guess I'll get it.
MR. TRIX—What! $165 for a coat! Nothing doing. I can't afford an extra collar.

MRS. TRIX—No new coat, eh? I'll wear this old-fashioned thing Sunday and see if that won't bring him to terms.

MRS. TRIX—Let them laugh if they want to. It's a nice, warm coat, and I intend wearing it all the winter.
MR. TRIX (aside)—I'd give anything, if we were only home. How in the world will I ever get her to lose that coat? She seems to like it.

MR. TRIX—Great Scott! Look at that mob! And next Sunday we call on my boss. I've simply got to get rid of that coat.

MR. TRIX—Great!!! This solves that problem I have been worrying about all week. I'll get her that and she'll forget all about that fright she wore last Sunday.

MRS. TRIX—Is this for me Oh, you good, kind hubby! This is a surprise.
MR. TRIX—Just a little New Year present. (Aside) This is too easy. It takes the men to fool the women every time.

"I SEE BY THE PAPERS"

By Aaron Hoffman

(All Stage Rights Reserved by Aaron Hoffman.)

MR. NICKEL SQUEEZE, the oldest conductor on the Boston street cars, after twenty-three years' close observation of passengers, declares that the workman is more polite in the subway than the rich youth. He says that it is the laborer who is considerate, patient, and courteous, and it is the laborer who yields his seat to a lady, and that it is the millionaire who is arrogant, unamiable, violent and selfish. It is the millionaire who pushes, crowds, jostles, jounces and hides behind his paper while a lady is doing ground and lofty acrobatics on the strap. Mr. Squeeze ought to know, and we must credit his statement, but we confess that we had no idea that nothing but millionaires traveled in the street cars. We have used the cars for years, but all Mr. Squeeze's information is correct we have never encountered a laborer yet. Only last night I was rudely squeezed, pushed and trampled upon by a rough millionaire on his way from work with his dinner pail in one hand and a shovel in the other.

AFTER two years of experimenting a recent report pronounced the Dog Policeman a "howling" success.

They say that the intelligence of these animals is wonderful, and that if there is a crook around they can smell him out instantly. Why, they say that the first night they put a dog on duty they brought him to the station, and as soon as he came into the office he took a couple of sniffs, grabbed the Captain and tried to put him in a cell. Then he went after the Lieutenant, and he would have got the Sergeant, too, if they hadn't grabbed the dog and put a muzzle on him.

In one way the dog policeman is just like some of the regular policemen. If a thief gets caught all he'll have to do is to slip him a couple of "bones." But there wouldn't be nearly as much graft with dogs as with policemen, because a policeman is after the "dollars" whereas a dog would be satisfied with "cents." They say that these dogs know just what is expected of them. The first one was brought down to Headquarters was a great Dane, a magnificent specimen. They brought him in, put a blanket and a star on him, and said, "You are now a policeman." And he laid right down and went to sleep.

But with dogs as policemen we'll have to be very careful. Some yellow mutt will come up snuffing around you and you won't dare to kick him for fear that he might be a detective. He might be a bloodhound disguised as a fox terrier.

You know these dogs are trained not to bite. They are taught to capture, not to injure. When a robber tries to get away, these dogs are trained to seize the fugitive by the pants, and a burglar when captured by a police dog must choose, and choose quickly, whether he loses his liberty or his pants. That's a splendid idea as long as the robber is a man.

ANDREW CARNEGIE has given a fund of ten million dollars to promote peace. It's splendid of him, really, but it won't do a bit of good. Whenever the Beef Trust finds itself with a lot of unsalable and unsuitable canned goods on hand we'll have a war just the same. A fund of ten million dollars! Why, a base-telle like that won't stop the Beef Trust. They made twenty times that out of the last war, and you can rest assured that when the Beef Trust decides that their business requires another fracas to boost it they have plenty of patriotic Congressmen on their pay rolls who will be ready to raise the flag and the price of beef. The only way to prevent us having a war is for Carnegie and a few other philanthropists to club together and buy up all the meat that the trust has in cold storage and there will no longer be any necessity for war. What is a war as we in this country have come to know it? It is a desperate struggle wherein one side gets a licking and the Beef Trust gets the money.

AT a recent session of the "Divine Commission" it was decided to advocate the establishment of a "Governing Matrimonial Bureau." They want the National Government to regulate all marriages. Not satisfied with the results of "marriages made in heaven," they want to have them "made in Washington." Every marriageable person will be classified, and, presumably, is listed. Imagine a fellow going around looking for a wife wearing the label "Guaranteed Strictly Pure Under the Matrimonial Act of 1912." Or a more unfortunate brother bearing a label "20 Per Cent Adulterated!"

According to the proposed law no marriages will be permitted unless both parties thereto have been found suited to each other by the bureau and "O. K." by the proper official.

Before you fall in love with a girl you'll have to see the inspector and ask his permission. If the inspector refuses to "O. K." your sweetheart you will have to pass up the girl of your choice and marry the girl of his.

What an opportunity for any old maids who happened to have a "pull"!

And what chance do you suppose a Democrat would have of getting married with the Republicans in office?

A DISTINGUISHED German scientist shatters the prevalent belief that the "heart" is the seat of our affections. He claims that the "heart" is merely an organ of circulation and that the "liver" is really responsible for the "grand passion." He says the ancients knew this, and hence the word "lover" obviously from the word "liver." And therefore, we presume, a "call" lover should really be called a "cave liver."

What a revolution this important discovery will make in the literature of love! Hereafter, when the ardent avian proposes he cannot say, "Darling, I love you with all my heart," he must murmur in impassioned tones, "Darling, I love you with all my LIVER!" And alas! for all our poetry! Instead of "two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that beat as one," it will have to be "two souls with but a single thought, two livers that beat as one."

WHEN it was first proposed that there be built another subway in Boston we were pleased. We thought things would be easier and we could travel in peace and comfort more cars and more seats. But now we know that all we will get will be the old familiar rush hour "Competition," where a hundred and fifty-eight "strapping" citizens will "compete" for each strap. Or you can readily see what a great proposition it is for the people.

HEALTH experts warn the public against handling paper money. "Claim that bank notes carry 'bacilli,'" "greenback-cill," so do. They assert that the promiscuous exchanging of money has caused the spread of a great many diseases, particularly, of course, dollar "biliousness." There is no question but that the experts are right. We have known many cases where a rapid accumulation of such money has resulted in "swelling of the head," though seldom in "enlargement of the heart."

Money has also caused many promoters of corporate loans to be afflicted with "water on the brain," and several of them thanks to our Attorney General, have of late been suffering from "exposure."

We also see the dire results of its ravages in a poker game, where it is frequently responsible for "breakdowns," "paralysis of the heart," "nervous prostration" and "cold feet."

Under these conditions, with money a recognized menace to health, it is really dangerous to pay back the five and tens we have borrowed from people whom we like. At least so the experts would have us believe. Personally we know of few cases where paying back borrowed money to a friend has resulted in his death—except, perhaps, from the shock of surprise.

PROMINENT banker just returned from the Orient says that India offers untold opportunities for American capital and labor. He suggests that some of the working classes who find the burden of "high prices" a hardship should migrate to India, where the "cost of living is infinitesimal." India, you know, is the country where you don't have to rule yourself. The English take care of the job for everybody.

And there is no doubt that India is a wonderful country. It's a rich man's ideal country for a poor man to live in.

The wages of a skilled laborer over there is one "rup" a month. And a "ruppee" is worth 42½ cents in American money.

So you see a laborer makes a little over 1 cent a day. Of course if he is ambitious and works overtime and Sundays he can earn as much as $1.58 a year. And if he is industrious, as well as industrious, he can save a lot of money. Three cents every two years. But a man must never run in debt over there, because if he owes a man $2 it will take him a hundred and eighty years to pay it. There is one ruber over there! He is the richest working man in the country. He's a millionaire. He's a millionaire. He's a millionaire.

Just the same as Morgan and Rockefeller are over here. He's got $125. Made it all himself, too. And he's only ninety-eight years old. Nobody over there believes he accumulated all that money honestly. In fact, he's a politician. He's been grafting for years.

India is without doubt the cheapest country in the world to "chump." Why, if a man spends 2 cents for food he's considered a spendthrift. If a lady spends 1 cent a party out to dinner and spends a nickel for a little jab for being extravagant and living beyond his means.

You can get into a restaurant and eat a table d'hôte dinner—eighteen cents—eleven different kinds of rice—and when you get through with your dinner a course table d'hôte dinner it costs you 1 cent. And if you want to tip the waiter you give him a "rupee" of five. It saves up his tip for ten years and then he has enough for a table d'hôte dinner for himself.

Labor is so cheap over there that a man sells the services of himself and his son and his grandson for life for $10. A father puts his son and grandson in a job before they are born. Every boy is born with a job. He doesn't have to advertise. It's waiting for him.

If a father doesn't have any children he has to give $5 back. That's why they have such large families.

How He Was Compelled to Woo His Own Widow

(Copyright, 1910, by American Journal Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

ROXANA CLAYTON catches her husband, Jack, kissing another woman. They have been married but an hour or two, and while some women might have been lenient enough to give their husband a little time to outgrow habits acquired in bachelor days and to break off old friendships, Roxana can't see it that way. She leaves him without waiting for explanations and returns from Europe, whither she had gone to be married, to America. She joins her old friends, garbed in deep mourning, and makes the sad announcement that her husband is dead.

Six months after his "death" Roxana is invited to spend a week at Palm Beach at a friend's house party. During these six months the "late lamented" Clayton has been hunting high and low for his "widow," anxious to make explanations and amends. He scours America, and finally gets a trace of her. Learning that she is to be a guest at the house party at Palm Beach, he contrives to be invited as the "Duke of Moreland." When the guests begin to gather, Roxana unexpectedly finds herself confronted by the man she had proclaimed "dead." As he is known at the party as the Duke of Moreland, he is introduced to her as such, and none of Roxana's friends are any the wiser. As soon as he has the opportunity Clayton gets his wife apart from the others and asks her why she left him.

Well, of course, I suppose you ought to know! But it's the first I've heard of it!

How did it happen?

Good Lord, Roxa! You don't mean that you've put on this "come-but-not-forgetten" attire because you saw

ROXANA

What else could I do? Do you think I could have come back here to my friends after having written of the wonderful man I was to marry and of his love for me, and to them: "Yes, I was married secretly, six months ago. Before I'd started on my honeymoon I found my husband with another, a half-hour after the marriage ceremony." Do you think I could bear the sympathy—the laughter—the pity?

CLAYTON

I tell you that woman being in my room was an accident

ROXANA

I suppose her being in your arms was an accident. I suppose your kissing her was an accident. Saying "Well, next again, Suzette!" Suzette! Nice, innocent name! She was forty if she was a day!

CLAYTON

But I was only saying good-bye! You know, dear, we were married so suddenly there wasn't time to break off old friend ship—and—

ROXANA

Heaven knows she was old!

CLAYTON

If you'd only liked! I can explain—I—

ROXANA

Explain! Didn't I see—didn't I hear—didn't I—

CLAYTON

Tell me you never gave me a chance to tell you—

ROXANA

What are you doing here, anyway? I thought I buried you!

CLAYTON

I've been waiting here for you. I have been keeping track of your movements for the last month; and, knowing that you were to be here, contrived to be invited, too!

ROXANA

Oh!

CLAYTON

You made a great mistake, dear, when you left me. You let your feelings—

ROXANA

My feelings? Don't think I broke my heart, and don't think I'm wearing this black dress because I care. I'm happy, absolutely happy. So much so I have to conceal it!

CLAYTON

Let me compliment you. You succeed admirably!

ROXANA

I think heaven every day of my life I found out before it was too late! Before our marriage really became a marriage. What a fool I was to marry you!

CLAYTON

Looking at you now, I ask myself, "Why? Why?"

CLAYTON

I believe that is the usual question—afterward.

ROXANA

If I'd only known then what I know now—

CLAYTON

What do you know?

ROXANA

I know everything about you—everything!

CLAYTON

I see you have been compiling my memoirs!

ROXANA

I was foolish enough to think I was the first woman in your life—the first! The hundred and first!

CLAYTON

My dear, if you insist upon being accurate, the hundred and third!

ROXANA

But please remember you're the first woman I ever married!

CLAYTON

I didn't realize what an honor was being conferred upon me! To be tied to a modern Don Juan! An irresistible Lechario—a lady-killer—who had left behind him all over Europe a trail of battered hearts! Yes, and in Africa, too, for all I know!

But I loved you, Roxa, and you know it. You haven't any idea what I've suffered these months when I didn't know where you had gone—how to reach you! Why, Roxana, dear—

ROXANA

Don't call me Roxana—don't call me dear!

CLAYTON

In fact, don't speak to me at all!

ROXANA

You're dead!

CLAYTON

Dead! Very well (Clayton steps to table and raps slowly three times upon it.)

Mrs. Clayton—your husband's spirit wishes to communicate with you.

ROXANA

You tell my husband's spirit to go to—

CLAYTON

That's all very well, Roxana—but you and I must have some sort of understanding about our general attitude toward each other. You were to be here—

ROXANA

I had planned to stay a week

CLAYTON

But your finding me here will cause you to change your plans?

ROXANA

Certainly not—why should it? You don't exist!

CLAYTON

Am I not one at all?

ROXANA

You're the Duke of Moreland

CLAYTON

Thank you. It's good to feel the solid earth beneath my feet again! Now I am also looked for a week, more or less. I can't very well leave without occasioning remark, and inasmuch as I'm simply the Duke of Moreland, there's no real reason why I should leave.

ROXANA

Oh, pray, don't discommodate yourself on my account!

CLAYTON

Well, here we are, then—bottled up to gether. Let's face the situation. Doesn't it occur to you that it will—at least cause comment—if you refuse to speak to me—if you make a point of shunning me?

But I don't. You must remember I've just met—

ROXANA

Don't talk nonsense—

CLAYTON:

Listen, Mrs. Clayton. I must be one thing or the other—either I'm your late lamented husband, who has bobbed up serenely and fortunately—or else—

ROXANA:

You're the Duke of Moreland!

CLAYTON:

Well and good. But that being the case, I must insist that you do not visit upon my newly acquainted, respectable, honored head the iniquities of the disreputable, dishonored, disinterested—Mr. Clayton. I am willing to keep silent in regard to that assassinatory incident in your career, but only on condition that you treat me in every respect as the Duke of Moreland, whom you've just met.

ROXANA:

You presume to dictate to me how I shall—

CLAYTON:

Not at all. I can't make you do anything you don't want to do, but I can, if I wish resurrect Mr. Clayton.

ROXANA

You threaten me?

CLAYTON:

Oh, no!

ROXANA:

I'd like to know what you call it?

CLAYTON:

I simply hold you to your bargain. You are Mrs. Clayton—I am the Duke of Moreland—you're going out of mourning—you are once more, so to speak, in the market, so why, in the name of justice, shouldn't I be permitted to make love to you?

ROXANA:

Yes! It's going to be a very pretty game for you, isn't it? But may you not find it a trifle dangerous?

CLAYTON

Dangerous?

ROXANA

Doesn't it occur to you that you are playing with fire?

CLAYTON

Are you fire?

ROXANA:

You're going to be very busy making Mrs. Clayton fall in love with you—but what if at the end of the week you find that you are in love with her?

CLAYTON

I'm already somewhat in love with her.

ROXANA:

You—but if it's more than somewhat? If you're madly, passionately—heart-breakingly—

CLAYTON:

That would be decidedly pleasant.

ROXANA:

Not if she laughed at you when you went down on your knees to her!

CLAYTON:

SHE TRIMMED THEM, OH, SO NEATLY!

START RIGHT THE FIRST TIME

Copyright, 1911, by the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner.

A BANK clerk borrowed forty or fifty thousand dollars from his employers with which to play the stock market. He was so sincere about his intention to pay it back that he neglected to ask their permission when he took the money. In a week or two he discovered that he was not as good a stock prophet as he had supposed, and that so much of the borrowed money was gone that he could never hope to pay it all back. So he put what was left into a suit case and went to Canada.

But although temporarily safe from pursuit, he was not out of reach of a torturing conscience. He reflected that the money really did not belong to him, and that he ought to have consulted its owners before he borrowed it. He thought it would be a good idea to pay back as much as he could and to try to make up the rest later on.

So he wrote to the bank that he wanted to come back, give up all the money in his possession and make a fresh start. He was deeply grieved when he discovered that he would be prosecuted and probably sent to prison. It was the first indiscretion he had ever committed, he said. He did not see why a man who was really convinced of the error of his ways should not be permitted to make a new beginning.

This young man will have an opportunity to start life anew, but he will have to start it with the fifteen dollars and the new suit of clothes allowed to every convict who leaves the penitentiary discharged.

He will have to start it with the stigma of a convict upon him.

Unless he possesses some far higher talent than the gift of borrowing other people's money this stigma will stick to him through life. He may secure an excellent position and by hard work and attention to business begin to climb toward success. And then some day he will be recognized and an outraged employer, demanding how he dared associate with honest men, will turn him out into the street.

Life is full of incidents like that. The really penitent criminal, eager to be honest, to begin right and remain right, is driven from one place to another, always frowned upon, always dismissed as soon as his secret is discovered.

And at last, finding that honest men refuse to welcome him, he will turn to men who are not so honest, and in time become one of the chronic offenders, who get the long sentences at hard labor.

It is true that our system of punishment for many offenses is barbarous, and often results in the wholesale manufacture of criminals. But it is also true that no man needs to begin wrong. The first start can be the right start. And the man who makes it so will have a far easier time than the man who thinks that there can be a second and a third beginning, and that the first really doesn't count.

The mania for getting rich quick is contagious, but there is no necessity for exposing oneself to it. The clerk who is ambitious to be president of the bank may achieve his ambition, perhaps, but not by dipping sticky fingers into the till.

And better never be president or vice-president or cashier or even a head clerk than by making a beginning that will lead to disgrace and perhaps ruin for life.

The time to begin a career is in youth, when enthusiasm refuses to admit that there is such a word as impossibility, when even the wearisome details of business seem promising steps to something higher.

Starting afresh at thirty or forty is bitter, discouraging business, even without the handicap of a criminal record.

If you could ask all the discouraged, tired men whom you meet why they find life so hard, they would answer that they were not interested in what they were doing. They began wrong.

The man who is plodding along in a business house at a salary that makes no headway against the mortgage on his home bitterly repents his choice of a "white-collar job" when he was young. Had he not been so desirous of getting something "genieel" to do, he might have begun as a machinist and developed the mechanical ability he knows he possesses. But he feared the ridicule of his "friends" when they saw him in overalls. He was afraid of the dirt and grease of the machinery, of the hard work after hours at mathematics and the theory of mechanics. And so when something "clean" was offered he took it. And now at forty he knows that he lacks the moral and physical courage to make a second beginning.

Another man—a stock broker's clerk, on a salary which would just about suffice to keep the head of the firm in cigars—was attracted by the lure of Wall Street. He had executive ability, a good education and abundant native industry. With these he thought he could easily make a fortune in the "Street."

But as the years went by he discovered that the men who were advanced by his employer were those with the suave address and "mixing" ability which made acquaintances easily and as readily persuaded his acquaintances to deal in stocks.

Had this man gone into one of the great department stores his qualities would have counted, and he might to-day hold a highly paid and important position. But now it is too late. He started wrong in the beginning; he must go wrong through life.

Everywhere you go you will find misfits, and always they are among the ranks of the disappointed. Present advantage led most of them wrong at the start, misdirected determination kept them from making a change the instant they discovered that they were not on the right track. And always before their eyes was the hope that should they at last fall at what they were doing there would be the chance of making a second beginning—a new start in life.

But to the man with his way to pay the years pass before he knows. And when at length he sees unmistakably that he would have been better in something else, he must have almost superhuman courage to undertake a fresh beginning.

Now and then a general in our army, with plenty of time to ponder on opportunities for promotion, suggests that it would be a good thing if we copied the Continental plan of compulsory military service.

This would mean that every young American, at the time he ought to be making a right beginning, would be compelled to make a wrong beginning.

One or two or three of the best years of his life would be taken from him for the purpose of teaching him a trade that would prove utterly useless in later life.

While he ought to be thinking and planning and studying for the work he is to do in life he would have to drill, polish his rifle, brush his clothes and shine his shoes or pace to and fro guarding a garrison that no one on earth had the slightest intention of disturbing.

In a time when competition is keen and when parents are wondering how their sons are ever going to make a comfortable living a young man needs every hour of his youth to equip himself for the fight he must make for existence.

It would be a beautiful piece of idiocy to rob him of his best years in order to start him in exactly the wrong direction.

To Make a New Beginning Is Possible, of Course, but Only at a Heavy Expense of Youth and Energy.

The reader of middle age needs no warning about making a wrong start. Most men have made them, and spent long and unnecessary efforts in retrieving themselves.

A boy who intends to be an engineer had better study engineering and work at engineering. A course in a law school will do him no good whatever.

The boy who expects to be a lawyer is wasting his time clerking in a shoe store, unless he must thereby earn the money he needs to study law.

Any youth who begins life in this rushing, energetic, excited age will find he has all he can do to make headway if he starts right. He cannot achieve any great success unless he does something that has never been done before, and he will soon learn that this is by no means an easy task.

The only way is to start right. Let the man who has started wrong make the second beginning. For him there is no alternative save utter failure. But youth, with all life before it, CAN start right, and it is far wiser, as well as far easier, to make one start than two.

For no man can be happy or successful or of use to others unless he does what he is best fitted to do. Instinct will tell him what that is. It is for him to think long and seriously before he begins his life work, and then begin it without any false starts.

committee were accused of disloyalty supporting Democratic candidates at last State election. The new committee has no jurisdiction over the acts of members of the last committee, but members accused of treason are members of the new committee and all attend meeting to be held Wednesday evening. The committee consists of twenty-five members, six being elected from each

An investigating committee secured evidence of disloyalty, but failed to report and action will be demanded at Wednesday's session.

One member of the committee said he has no authority to take any action against the unfaithful members, but can get it before the new committee before the election of officers. If the committee fails to take any action the public will be warned and the voters will be informed.

Two candidates have announced their intention of seeking the office of president and it is proposed to enter another man on the night of election. Secretary William H. Farnham and Frank McDonald's name announced candidates, and the name of Judge George M. Stearns will also be announced.

City Solicitor Harry W. James, president of the committee whose term expires tonight, announced before election that would not be a candidate for reelection because "the committee has ceased to be an efficient and representative body of the Republican party."

MADMOISELLE D'ORVILLE

PARIS, like ancient Greece in the days of Phryne and Aspasia, makes a cult of beauty. Every season there are certain reigning beauties—three or four of them. They are fervently admired by countless thousands on the boulevards, in the Bois or at the theatres, for they are always actresses. The reigning beauties of the past year, elected by universal admiration, have been Mademoiselle Anna Perrey, Mademoiselle d'Orville, Mademoiselle Meyan and Gabrielle Ray. The last named is an English actress of remarkably statuesque and picturesque beauty, and on her appearance in Paris immediately became an idol of the gay capital. Mademoiselle d'Orville is one of the youngest and freshest among these divinities. She is particularly admired by Count Boni de Castellane, and, as everybody knows, he is a very great connoisseur of beauty. She is noted not only for her beauty, but also for her distinction of manner and elegance. There is a delightful mystery about her origin. It is generally believed that she is a Bavarian baroness. Mademoiselle Meyan, who is a very youthful beauty, is especially admired by the artists and students of Paris, for she was once a founding in the Latin Quarter. Mademoiselle Anna Perrey is quite celebrated as the owner of a great collection of signed photographs of European Kings and royalties. Writing about the collection recently, she said: "You can't collect royal personages as you collect paintings, jewels and antiques. The consent of the collected is necessary—you have to catch your king before you can add him to your collection." "Well, the newsmen have been a great help. It was only a little while after the papers began to print my photographs that royalty and nobility began to patronize the theatres where I acted." On this page there is a new charming picture of Mademoiselle Anna, that the kings may cut out and paste in their albums.

OLDER THAN BABYLON AND NINEVEH!

Remarkable Facts About a Forgotten People, Skilled in Architecture and the Other Arts, Who Dwelt on the Plains of Arizona Thousands of Years Ago

REMAINS of what is believed to be the oldest prehistoric city ever discovered have just been unearthed in Arizona by Mr. A. Lafave, a mining engineer and archaeologist.

Older than the ancient cities of Babylon and Nineveh of Babel, older than the North American Indian or even the cliff dwellers who preceded him in this country, older perhaps than the ancient cities of South America, this prehistoric Arizona city was nevertheless the center of a civilization as highly advanced as that of the Incas of South America or the Aztecs of Mexico.

Indeed, some of the articles of pottery and other relics recovered by Mr. Lafave bear a strong resemblance to similar treasures recently excavated by Mr. T. Heist, living in the Chimu country of Peru, and which are regarded as the most ancient specimens of human handwork in the world, dating back approximately seven thousand years. According to Mr. Lafave, however, this hidden city of Arizona is even older than Chimu, in which event it must now be regarded as the oldest city thus far discovered.

The History of the First Americans Challenged on a Cliff Near Their Buried City and Waiting for Science to Decipher.

A Fine Chimu Head Found in Peru

This Race May Have Been Kindred to That of Arizona

built upon the same principle that stalagmites and stalactites are formed. Everything near it gradually turns to stone, as exemplified in the wonderful petrified forest of Arizona. I found a child's foot and leg embedded in a solid rock of solidified mud.

"I am satisfied that this Arizona civilization was much older than Nineveh or Babylon. I believe a highly cultivated race inhabited the country for many years, for I have found works of art that could not have been executed by an ignorant people. I have found pottery that far surpasses anything made today, and the designs upon it show artistic ability far superior to that of other ancient sculptors and painters."

That there was a well-advanced state of civilization existing among the peoples of the plains cities is evidenced by the discovery of ditches, no doubt constructed for irrigation purposes. No such remains are found among the cliff dwellers' country except in one region of northern Mexico, where even present day Indians and Mexicans are utilizing some of the old ditches, unearthing hundreds of years after their original construction. The majority of the cliff dwellers appear to have made their livelihood as hunters, for baskets, doubtless used to carry game and wild berries, are found, also bows and arrows and spears, while in the houses of the people who lived on the plains only implements of peace have been unearthed. Jara explains

A Cliff Dwelling Near the Buried City—and Above, a Beautiful Piece of Pottery from the Chimu Graves in Peru

"The buildings of this city," declared Mr. Lafave, "are made principally of sandstone and show signs of architectural skill. My belief in their great age is based on the fact that I found an accumulation of earth ten or more feet deep covering the ruins, out on a plain where it must have been gathered merely by being blown there. For such an accumulation of dust to gather would require centuries. The dirt cannot be the result of wash or drift, for the site is high above the surrounding country and the real city is on top of a mountain."

"In the walls which I excavated I found a crude containing cotton balls in a perfect state of preservation. There is an cotton within several hundred feet of the place at present but has been blown out there so far as the memory of man or the legend of the Indians can be traced. From this I infer that the climate of Arizona must have been very different in thousand years and to what it is today, for cotton will not grow here."

"The foothills in the Tonto Basin I saw a shaft about twenty feet deep unearthed in a sand bank, and a corn, half of cotton and other things of an agricultural nature are found among the ruins of these homes.

Stone axes and hammers are also found in the houses of the cliff dwellers, but none of these implements were found in the dwellings on the plains. This indicates again that the people were of different families and tastes and, perhaps, of a different period of existence, although the association has been ascertained that the two civilizations might have been co-existent and that the carrying tribes in the mountains inhabited the more peaceful people of the valleys.

This however is all a matter of speculation, for history does not record anything that would shed any light on the existence of any of these tribes or peoples. However, the inference drawn is that the plains men were the first, most of the Indians showing their homes to be much older than those in the mountains, and the inference is that the plains men belonged to a civilization far antedating that of the men of the cliffs and that the cliff dwellers were either descendants of the plains people or of a different race entirely.

Ruins of the Wonderful Buried City in Arizona Now Being Excavated

The Sun God Which Was Worshipped Both by the Chimu and the People of the Buried City

Whether the buried cities of the plains had any connection with the cliff dwellers or not, the people lived in much the same manner although investigation into their methods of warfare and everyday life as revealed by the implements of war and peace found in the ruins of their dwellings shows that their habits were different. Mr. Lafave believes that the plainsmen were the original settlers and that, peculiar as it appears, they were even more advanced in civilization than the men of the caves who came later, although he will not venture the assertion that the cliff dwellers were the descendants of the men of the plains. It is argued that it is possible that the plainsmen began to fight among themselves and took to the canyons and mountains for protection and, thus forced to give up their agricultural pursuits, they became hunters and meat eaters and dropped back into a less civilized stage. Being forced to abandon many of their peaceful arts, they became more savage, and for this reason, he ventures, the earlier settlers could have been the pioneers and still be more intelligent. The two races might have been distinct and different, the cliff dwellers knowing no more about the plainsmen than we know about the cliff dwellers, he admits, but he does not think it probable. He is rather loath to believe that the cliff dwellers were the plains dwellers driven into the mountains.

What to Do for that Cold—By Your Family Doctor.

"COLD," varying in intensity from slight indispositions up to the severest of ailments, is one of the most common of the everyday ailments. It is the simple "cold" in the nose, the most frequent complaint during the winter months, the most common of the everyday ailments. the hair below, guarding against dust and particles of foreign matter, which are harmful to the lungs, and finally, they supply moisture to the inhaled air, so preparing it for the respiratory organs.

All this shows the great value of the nose, and the necessity of its proper function. The knowledge of the function of the nose and its proper use is an important factor in the prophylaxis against colds and influenza. the very low collars of women's dresses, low shoes and thin stockings in unpromising weather, exposure to drafts or direct outside air when the body is at rest.

Among the predisposing causes may be mentioned a condition of individual susceptibility upon the part of some people—that is, their physical state may be below par and they are unable to resist or throw off a temporary congestion; such people usually complain of "catching cold" very easily.

In acute colds, the membrane of the nose becomes swollen and reddened, and at first is very dry and irritating. As the condition progresses, it becomes moist and gives off a thin, watery secretion—the characteristic "running of the nose."

congested with often a painful, burning sensation. The nose feels full and dull, causing slight deafness.

When symptoms of an acute cold in the head develop, one should remain indoors, in a room well ventilated and not overheated. Plenty of being the waste material. As effective cathartic should also be taken at this time.

I shall at once a week or ten days the symptoms will have disappeared, and then it is important for one to get his general condition back to normal. A more or less depressed state follows an acute cold for a few days. A tonic or reconstructive, like cold liver oil, will help wonderfully. If you seem to remain "run down" and a cough persists it would be well to see your doctor at once.

One great danger in the self-treatment of a cold in the head is the general and perverted idea people have of taking large doses of quinine. This is a very bad practice, and is absolutely counterindicated. The drug, in small doses during the attack, is of benefit, but at the outset, used to "break up" a cold, it is harmful, the effect being most deleterious upon the ears, which are always secondarily congested during the attack. Excessive doses of the drug will not abort an attack.

A cold in the head may extend downward and go on to affection of the trachea or "windpipe," and the large bronchial tubes which branch out from it. This is acute bronchitis, commonly known as "cold on the chest."

The lining membrane of these tubes presents a catarrhal inflammation which causes it to become swollen, reddened and covered by more or less profuse secretion, a similar condition to that of coryza. This gives rise to symptoms much the same as a cold, only more severe. In addition, the patient usually suffers from a soreness, tightness or distinct pain in the chest, just behind the breastbone. Cough is present at first dry, with little or no expectoration; later it becomes loose and is accompanied by mucous and tenacious material which is stained by sputum. When the secretion becomes more abundant, the attack begins to subside and the patient feels better.

Some fever may be present, and these symptoms greatly aggravated. The condition usually lasts for from one to three weeks. Danger from pneumonia or influenza should be borne in mind during the course of this disease.

In general, the remedies and treatment given in connection with cold in the head should be used here. A hot mustard footbath with the hot drink at bedtime is helpful in drawing the congestion from the chest. Rub the chest, over the painful area, with a good liniment, or counter-irritant such as camphorated oil, or put on a mustard plaster. Renewal of labor in a room of equal and moderate temperature. The irritating cough is often relieved by the inhalation of steam, which is also effective in overcoming the feeling of tightness in the chest. In the later stage of the cough, when there is much secretion, the expectorant mixture mentioned below will be of value.

The following formulae, in connection with the suggestions given above, will be found very helpful in treating a cold in the head and bronchitis.

To relieve pain, stiffness and congestion, in cold in the head:

Sodium chloride.... 8 grains
Boric acid..... 8 grains
Sodium borate..... 10 grains
Water enough to make 3 ounces.

Use in an atomizer or spray the nose three or four times a day.

At the same time take internally capsules, each containing:

Powdered champhor... 1/4 grain
Sodium chloride..... 1 grain
Take one capsule every three hours.

To relieve pain, stiffness and congestion, in cold in the head:

Compound tincture of benzoin..... 1 dram
Add one teaspoonful to a pint of boiling water and inhale the steam.

For the cough, when there is much secretion:

Chloride of ammonium 2 1/2 dram
Syrup of squill..... 4 dram
Ext. of licorice..... 10 grain
Oil, camphor..... 8 grains
Water enough to make 4 ounces.

Take one desaturnipoint in a little water every four hours.

WILL Inez Milholland marry Sidney Smith, the husband of Mrs. Fanny Taylor Smith and genial sportsman of the Long Island set? Will she cap all the many spectacular performances of her suffrage career by marrying a man who has a horror of suffragettes and who looks with abhorrence on the Votes for Women cause? Never!

Miss Milholland has other plans for a matrimonial future. Who would the man with courage enough to wed the Socialist-Suffragette? Let us whisper it gently—the lucky man is Landon Bates, Jr., a member of the last Assembly and a recent convert to the cause. There are the consoling who fear that the suffragette will lose her matrimonial chances?

There never was a more obnoxious suffragette than the "Fair Inez." She began her career when she was seventeen, a freshman at Vassar, and each year she only added to its strenuousness. She believes in no half-way measures.

And yet there are to-day three well-known men eager to win her heart! And there have been other captives, too numerous to mention. There have been Enklingshams who yearned to win the beautiful, if rampagous, college girl. Lord Curzon, it was noticed, two years ago in London, accepted every opportunity to meet her.

Mr. Bates does not promise to aid the girl he loves in all her activities, but he promises not to interfere with her. And that belief alone. Victory through defeat will undoubtedly become Mr. Bates's slogan. For Assemblyman Bates, alas, was defeated at the last election and will not journey to Albany this Winter. He lost his district by a small majority, although Miss Milholland campaigned for him. The defeated politician is not keenly subject to misgiving; he gained his heart's desire, if not his political hope.

In the beginning of her career Mr. Bates was not a suffragist. He was a serious-minded student, an author and a traveler. When not studying economical problems he traveled through unfrequented parts of the world. He is a Yale man and a civil engineer. Several years ago he explored the Hudson Bay country, not with any idea of finding the Pole, but for scientific pleasure. Just after the Russian railroad across Siberia was finished, Mr. Bates traveled along it to Irkutsk and thence by sledges along the old caravan route to Ugra, in Mongolia.

On his homeward journey he had a heartrending experience. The people in that part of the world are not very clean and they all sleep in one room. Last Winter Houghton-Mifflin published his "Russian Road to China," and this completed Miss Milholland's interest in the subject. The Russian Road led direct to her heart.

When Miss Milholland marries will she continue her maiden efforts to serve the vote? Yes, indeed! "Nothing will ever swerve me from my work," she says. And husband will be up against it.

And what were these efforts? A resume will show what Miss Milholland's future husband will be up against it.

When she was a small child she gave all her pocket money to poor children. Her mother often said that she never knew what lame, bed-ridden beggar child would bring home, but she always returned with a bundle of feminine necessities.

When she went to Vassar her socialist friends were troubled. For business purposes her father, John Milholland, had to spend part of each year in London. Inevitably socialist meetings there, and at seven years could speak earnestly and eloquently on the horrors of Woburn and London.

There were no slums at Vassar; but when there was will there's a way. The socialist student speedily interested herself in the slums of Vassar. Her father, John Milholland, was horrified. It was the most conservative college in the country. The faculty fairly hid their eyes when Miss Milholland had her own suffrage probation officer and got her name on the papers.

"Why did she come here?" they asked. Clifton in England, or Bryn Mawr would have been more suited to her activities. But this was mild. Vassar soon found that being a probation officer was the least of her desires.

During her first vacation Miss Milholland went to England. While there she made four speeches in Hyde Park and on street corners. She was arrested! Horrors! The Vassar faculty walked some more. The students, however, were proud, they swelled with pride and became less suffragettes on the spot.

During her Junior year Miss Milholland was elected to the position of president of the college. She broke two athletic records and succeeded in outwitting the faculty.

"Let's have a suffrage meeting," said Inez. "We will ask for the chapel." They asked, but received not. "Suffrage meeting? Never, never!" said President Taylor. "Outrageous," said the faculty as a unit.

And yet there was a suffrage meeting. A fire, sparking meeting. Where was it held? In the graveyard! Afraid of ghosts? No genuine suffragist believes in spooks of any kind, only they don't like to meet the graveyard alone. At dead of night sixteen hardy would be voters slipped out of their windows and forthwith under a tree on the campus. Then they marched valiantly to the place of dread and there listened to burning words from a resident Inez, who feared neither ghost, man, nor faculty.

The sixteen noble pioneers sang, softly, "The Battle Cry of Freedom" and that college classic: "Oh, down below where all is woe, the faculty, they'll be there! But in Heaven above, where all is love, the students, they'll be there!"

That midnight meeting marked the beginning of the end. The faculty realized that Inez, as the cause was first called, had become a force to be reckoned with. It was LINDON BATES, JR., FUTURE HUSBAND OF INEZ MILHOLLAND.

but several times in London she was arrested twice, and, alas! was bitterly disappointed on three other occasions when the bobbies were too lenient to arrest her. A suffragette glories in suffering for her cause and the more arrests she suffers the greater her glory.

Her New York arrest was more serious and more spectacular. It occurred after her graduation from college. Last Winter she sympathized with the shirt waist strikers. She helped them with money; she talked to employers and at them in public places. She was picked up. Then, oh, bliss! One day a most disagreeable policeman arrested her. Arrested Inez Milholland for breaking some unjust law. With her arrest a charming love affair became public. (Lieutenant "Willy" Torney was arrested with her. He brilled happily to suffer in his fair lady's cause. The reporters snapshotted him plentifully. It was a blot.

The Judge was cruel, and asked him why he was in New York doing such things instead of being on duty. The wretch! The Lieutenant blushed under the heat, and then said: "I am here on special duty, sir."

He was. That special duty was courting the lovely suffragette, Lieutenant Torney, like Mr. Smith, had no chance. The Russian Road to her heart had already been built. He suffered arrest, however, undaunted.

When she was arrested, Miss Milholland astonished the Judge by her knowledge of law. He discovered specially that she was a student of the New York University Law School. She told him she was studying law so as to be able to help herself and her sisters under just about any circumstances. Count on one for Miss Milholland! It was the Judge's turn to blush.

This case excited a good deal of comment here and abroad. It was finally dropped. But the end was not yet. After the strike was settled a shirt waist maker entered suit against her. Oliver Belmont and Miss Milholland under the Sherman Anti Trust act. He claimed that they interfered with his business. Verily, the path of the suffragist is as strewn with roses!

Miss Milholland's pathway of love shone by comparison with her fight for the cause. She converted Mr. Bates at an afternoon tea, one stormy day last November. During the legislative session he gave a suffrage tea party at his home on East 14th street. Miss Milholland poured tea and talked "Votes for Women."

It was predicted that her engagement to her husband would be announced at that tea. But she begged off. She wanted to spend one more Summer working in England. Many things were added to her credit during that "last Summer."

She had an interview with Premier Asquith, in which she persuaded him to be more openly friendly, and she turned the superb drawing room of her father's mansion on Prince of Wales Terrace into a political club. Daily meetings were held, and converts were made by the hundreds. The "last Summer" it is the most dramatic and most momentous announcement to be made—an announcement which will prove her again that being a suffragette does not prevent a maid from being a bride.

The Woman of To-Morrow

LET US rejoice over this widening of life, especially as women are realizing advantages. Man has always longed for a long life, but woman's life has been short up as it were, by man's brutal will a score of years too soon. Woman's life was closed in the East after she had reached the age of twenty, and after thirty in the West. True, she was left the privilege of childbearing life.

It was merely in that direction that she was allowed to expend the treasures of her intelligence, energy and her sensibility. And never mind if her children only dream of independence; never mind if she had no children at all.

Thus were created, by man's selfish attitude by his cruelty, those unfortunate, the scarred mother-in-law, the comic aunt, the irritable and bitter old maid who was sentenced to wait during years of uselessness and ennuity the coming of eternal sleep.

Woman entered early into the category of the "half dead"; she vegetated, she was banished from life. The new woman holds her own at last, and she has put behind her will continue to go—the life of her existence. As a man in love with life and one who is convinced that we can normally more than double the average length of life, and what is more, that we can usefully and agreeably continue to live well more than a hundred years, for our own and our neighbors' happiness, I gladly welcome that widening of life which is opening for women.

The dawn of a second life is now shining for woman, and that life is to be almost as useful as the first. Love may play no great part in that second existence of woman, but what matters? The woman of the goddess and inventor of the serious life of man, she will easily console herself for being no longer the goddess of his love. Love, after all, is not the whole of life. It is only one of its ornaments.

Moreover, beauty will no desert woman so soon in the future. Beauty will be more faithful to the new woman; or, rather, it will adapt itself to circumstances. It is the beauty of the soul which makes the beauty of being. A soul of kindness and severity has its outward sign in an expression of irresistible charm.

Having actually entered the earnest life of man, saturated, as it were, with the sorrows and the joys of his activities, woman will acquire a new beauty. Her beauty will be more ideal. During her second life woman will have, perhaps, a different beauty, but not less beautiful.

Woman's art, as we understand it today, is purely artificial. The broadening of her activity will remove all conventional barriers. There is no reason why woman should be limited by the intelligence and also her beauty even beyond the age of fifty. If she has an ideal and if she participates in the general life.

Already we have been able to notice the charming spectacle of women who have remained young very long because they overcome those obstacles which separated them from real and active life.

Authorities, woman artists, women whose tasks make them share in the happiness of the mastery of the matter, remain young much longer than their fellow-women. Watch, for instance, the women who are at the head of the dramatic and musical movement in France. The weight of years has hardly taken anything from their talent, and has left their charms almost intact. They remain on the stage as in life.

The eternal feminine is not dead. It has transformed itself. It has acquired a new beauty, new aims, new rights and new duties. But it needs new conditions of life in order to assert itself.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London and the foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes the Fashion Page for this newspaper each week. Her articles are illustrated with sketches and photographs of her exclusive London and American models, and of Parisian fashions.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

HAVE you realized, I wonder, that the triumph of America over England in made more manifest every day by practically every woman who takes her walks abroad—in the streets of London, at any rate?

For nowadays there are fully displayed beneath the increasingly short and scanty skirts, shoes and boots whose shaping and shortness at once proclaim their American modelling and making; whose adornment, moreover, generally consists—in the case of the shoes—of the doubly and fully looped silver ribbon how so familiar to fashionable femininity on the other side of the "Herring Pond," the heels, too, being more often of the "fishbone" than the slim "Louis" variety.

Yes, there is no doubt about it, American footwear seems supreme and smart to-day, and is likely, moreover, to retain its supremacy for just as long a time as the short skirt is produced by Fashion and her followers. And I am that Englishwomen have realized the advantage and, indeed, the necessity of some such radical change in their pettiot coverings, for from the very first, I have, as you will, I hope, remember, protested vehemently against the incongruity and the unsightliness of the enormously elongated footwear, whose exaggerated outline became positively grotesque as seen in conjunction and contrast with the abbreviated and narrow skirts.

And now that we have learned our lesson and acquired a new smartness thereby, I hope that we shall never forget it, even when our skirts become sufficiently lengthy again to afford a certain amount of concealment for our boots and shoes. Such added length and consequent elegance are already to be noted in the latest reception and afternoon toilettes, and just newly arrived from Paris, of which I am sending you a picture, touching the ground in front and at the back forming a skirt, though somewhat distinctive train. But, at the sides, where the soft folds of cloth are draped upward, the under skirt is cut sufficiently short to display the ankle shoes and all their American smartness of shape.

Contrasting Fabrics in This Gown.

Well, any way, the result of this new scheme is distinctively pliant, more especially as the contrast between the length and the shortness of, respectively, on skirt and under skirt, is accentuated by a further contrast between their fabrics. For, while the dress is, for the most part, composed of the softest and most supple of cloth, in a wonderful shade of blue-green, the under skirt, of which just that pliant peep is afforded at the sides, is of a white silk striped with black velvet, another telling introduction of this skirt and smart material being achieved with equal success, you see, in the corseage. Nor is this the only claim which the gown can make upon your attention and admiration as a novelty, for that little square train is finished off and weighted, too, at each corner by a long and handsome tassels of silk, which lends the two subtly suggested shades of blue and green, giving to each one the definiteness desired by the clever and shot interweaving of the cloth. Nor must you by any means omit to note and imitate those buttons, which are covered in the white silk, with just one velvet stripe.

Then let me introduce you to another new model, which I have just made in crepe de sole of softest cloud-gray coloring, and combined, as you may see, with black velvet, the scheme, as far as the dress itself is concerned, being completed by a bordering of skunk fur at the skirt hem. The toque is of turban modelling and made entirely of the fur, while there standing out in bold and beautiful relief, high at one side, is a huge aigrette of vivid cherry color. For the rest, stole and muff display a rare and rather effective blending of ermine and white satin, whose rival whiteness, as doubly velled with black chiffon, is softened into a more suggestive, tassels, blending black and white cord and silk, also add to the length of the skirt stole.

And now I have another word or two of news for you about fur, a second and smart ermine set, which I think worthy of chronicling, being first denuded of the decorative little tails, so that after unbroken and equidistant expanse of white, they may be all the more effectively grouped together as a bordering of fringes. Here again, too, the fur is divided, or the scarf, by a central and wide band of white satin, velled only slightly, this time, however, with black chiffon, but further ornamented with a plaiting of black satin. This trimming is repeated on the huge flat-topped hanging muff, on which two bands of the satin and chiffon are introduced, while its final curves are all followed by a fringe of ermine tails.

An Effective Use of Fur.

Skunk, in its turn, is still well to the fore, being worked in the softest and most supple of strands, when used alone for the making of long, wide stoles and giant muffs, though never, I think, have I seen it to greater advantage than when combined with chinchilla. For the contrast between the two furs is marked to a degree, not only as regards their coloring but also their texture, and the beauty of each seems to be accentuated and increased by this very fact. The chinchilla forms the widest and central part of the stole, the skunk, of course, being used as a bordering band, which not only outlines the long front, but also envelops one point at the back, the stole being of entirely new shaping and hanging in two other deep points over the waist. The scheme is not only effective in itself, but, furthermore, facilitates adjustment, it being most difficult for the average woman—as I have always admitted—to manage easily a really elegant and becoming arrangement of a long and absolutely straight scarf of fur.

A new black and white scheme, too, which is sufficiently striking to hold its own even in these days of night—of lovely and almost lurid shades, adorns a black satin with a bold Byzantine embroidery of white from silk and borderings of white and black for the lining in its turn being of white satin, velled with black chiffon. Or again, how do you like the idea of a veritable pouf of white silk velvet shot with gold, the lining, on the other hand, being of gold shot with blue, and in both cases the gleam of gold not being sufficiently insistent to clash with the lovely silvery gray of the chinchilla fur which borders the whole coat. Then of truly regal loveliness is a white satin kimono coat lined with finest shell pink satin and provided with a collar of Russian sable, the same superb fur being continued as a bordering for the wrap-over front and forming finally a deep, almost founcelle effect about the feet.

drinking and earnestly advised people to drown their sorrows in wine. "When shall we live if not now?" was the giddy advice of the sober.

The Romans carried overindulgence to an extraordinary degree. Of the many feasts given by Rome were given by the emperors. Claudius was noted for the rare wines he served. He often had six tables at his table. Like Tiberius, he died from eating the wrong kind of mushrooms.

Caligula gave his niece in the hall of fame to the drunken band of the main feast given by Rome. The excesses made fashionable by such potentates as Lucullus, Apicius, Nero, Vindex, Tiberius, Caligula, Vitellius and Domitian really began the days of Pompey, and they marked the beginning of the end of the republic. Of the many feasts given by Rome, not one cost less than $10,000, and he who gave almost a continuous banquet Commodus was a notorious drunkard, and Septimius Severus was not much better. Severus died of overindulgence in the flowing bowl.

A "Lucile" Study in Gray Crepe
The point over the head, in the new style, is a quaintness about it which is somewhat fascinating, I think, and you see the Oriental suggestion and inspiration are none in evidence. The straight and scanty little under-dress is of white satin and the short tulle of silver tissue bordered with spots of gold and edged, too, with a lace-like device and then a long fringe, both entirely carried out in the silver. Folded about the waist is a scarf of green chiffon, embroidered in gold and edged with a fold of palest blue.

How They Made Merry in the Olden Days

NEW YORK'S annual champagne orgy of welcome to the New Year is a feature of metropolitan life. At all the big hotels and restaurants tables have to be secured in advance and with the understanding that nothing less expensive than champagne will be served.

According to custom, the small hours of the first morning of every New Year witness scenes of splendid table cloths and forests of empty bottles; also thousands of hilarious, staggering men and women being assisted into their motor cars and taxicabs. Ministers of the Gospel and moralizing editors annually deplore this dreadful saturnalia, for the time being forgetting that never in history, in any land, was the "water season" in such general use as nowadays in this country.

By way of comparison, here are some facts of history showing what drunkenness and gluttony meant to ancient times.

Cæsar, on a certain occasion, while drunk on wine, is said to have given Brutus, his charioteer, a tip amounting to $75,000, the largest money tip on record. The most reckless of our modern millionaires thinks he's making an awful epiphany of it when he shows $25.

One of the Cæsars fed his charges on wine and barley in a golden vase. One of his dinners cost more than half a million. His supper bill for four mouths was twenty million dollars.

Philip of Macedon was a drunkard. He always left the banquet table staggering. Alexander the Great, his son, inherited the weakness for drink. It took him two days and two nights to sleep off a royal boozie. He died of drink at the age of thirty-two.

Dionysius, the younger, tyrant of Sicily, went on spree which lasted three months at a time. He lost his eyesight through over-indulgence. Nero was in the habit of sitting down at noon and staying there until midnight, eating and drinking all the time.

Tiberius was a sincere drunkard. After becoming "emperor of Rome," he was drunk so often that his army nicknamed him "Silvius," meaning "tippler." He had two pals, Flaccus and Pilo, with whom he went on spree. At the wedding stage they depicted the prevalence of drunkenness.

One time Tiberius had a vacancy for the quaestorship, and there were many applicants for the job. The man who got it drank a whole pitcher of strong wine while Tiberius himself had filled. The successful applicant had neither position nor "pull," but Tiberius said the man who could drink that amount of wine was the man for the place.

Tiberius was as cranky about eating as drinking. He gave Sabinius $10,000 for writing a sketch in which an ox, a thrush and a mushroom figured as characters. Tiberius was very fond of mushrooms and died from eating the wrong kind.

"Eat, drink and amuse yourself. All else is vanity," said Sardanapalus, the last king of the Assyrians, and these words were written on his tomb.

The ancients were so fond of drink that their most popular god was Bacchus. Their feasts in honor of Bacchus, Venus and Mars were characterized by debaucheries from which the most advanced libertines today would shrink in horror and disgust. The average command of Athens or Rome are and drank more in a single day than we do in a week.

The antiquity of drunkenness is not known, but one of the most ancient accounts of a bono is that of Lot, which is told in the Book of Genesis. The Persians, whose history goes back as far as any were famous drunkards in the old days.

The Greeks were moderate drinkers until they began to copy the luxury of the Persian feasts. The Romans imitated the Greeks. Then the whole world went on a mad drunk. It was a saturnalia.

In the beginning no wrong was thought of drinking, and the moralists even advised drink to dispel melancholy. Hippocrates upheld

Don't You Pity the Poor Ostrich?

A WOMAN who is fortunate enough to own ostrich plumes doesn't usually bother herself much about the manner in which these highly regarded feathers are obtained, but the process is a very interesting one nevertheless.

There seems to be a serious difference of opinion as to whether the operation is a painful one as far as the bird is concerned or not, some declaring that it is as painful as the pulling of a tooth is to a human being, while others compare it to the cutting of a person's nails.

It is true, however, that between the two, for while the process of plucking the feathers is a painful one, the quill feathers of the tail is absolutely painless, sharp pruning shears being employed for the purpose, the remaining two or three rows in the wing are plucked by hand, and the process is undoubtedly a most painful one to the bird.

Plucking ostrich feathers is quite a dangerous task unless great care is taken. The big bird does not willingly submit, and he has powerful legs with which he can kick, with which he can easily break a man's leg and even kill his tormentor if the kick is planted in the chest.

For this reason a novel method is employed on small ostrich farms, usually constructed in the form of a cage. The ostrich is blindfolded by means of a

As is shown in the illustration, two of the men pluck the white feathers and the third one, as far as the bird is concerned, is as far as the bird's tail firmly and presses it forward to prevent the ostrich from turning.

This method is effective, but where large numbers of birds are handled, as they are on the Los Angeles and other ostrich farms, elaborate pens are employed for the purpose. The bird being employed for the purpose, the small that has no room to kick, and his eyes are blindfolded by operation is plucked from the outside of the enclosure. In the big farms of Los Angeles thousands of birds are thus plucked every year, and their plumage is distributed throughout the country to adorn women who have no word of pity for the poor fellow who provides them with their ornaments.

Exotic and Grotesque Dinner

All Records Broken by Ingenious Hosts, Who Exhaust Stagecraft Surroundings for Dinners Celebrating Shipwrecks, Jonah the North Pole, the Jungle, Hades, Cold Storage and Even Appearances

THE year 1910 has broken all records for dinners at which the need of food and drink was of no particular importance.

The "Jungle Dinner," which was given at the Savoy Hotel, London, last night, was a record-breaking affair, and which the C. K. O. Billings "Dinner on Honeymoon," odd as the title was, could not eclipse—the newspaper paragraphers saw to that—now appears rather a tame proceeding compared with some of the dinner inventions of 1910.

Hereafter, it is to be up to date and diverse public notice, the "Jungle" dinner inventor must combine the genius of the great dramatist and the most resourceful stage director—a combination, so to speak, of Edmond Rostand and David Belasco.

The menu is not of much consequence, but the theme must be chosen with inspiration and worked out with the skill of a professional dramatist, and the scenic invention, "props" and costumes must be of the highest quality. Also the question of revenue must be ignored—the "Jungle" dinner gave has become too hot to admit of any pigmaliones in preparing the stage setting.

The successful "Jungle" dinner may represent any one of the several grand divisions of drama, except, perhaps, tragedy. The theme may be spectacular, melodramatic, comic, even farcical, but it must be philosophically in its nature, or commemorative of some unusual happening. It may be mainly scenic, with pantomime, or chief dining-actresses may have lives to declaim. As the illustrations and descriptions on this page show, efforts of the year now just ending have pretty well covered the whole field.

From the standpoint of expense and elaboration of dinner-stage setting, the "North Pole Dinner" given by Mr. George Kessler, the American millionaire, at the "Hampton Hotel" at the Savoy Hotel in London, holds the record to date.

Mr. Kessler proved himself a master of the dinner-stage art. He did not even stop at architectural changes of the hotel's interior, removing the roof of the banquet hall so that real stars might shine down upon the Arctic scene into which the large room was transformed.

From the margins where the ceiling had been hung great poles, and the whole floor, excepting a space in the centre reserved for the great dinner table, was piled with realistic ice hummocks like those so eloquently described by Lord Dunsany. The tops of some of these hummocks were given a further polar touch by the presence of polar bears, skittishly leaping. The roof being off, the temperature was appropriately arctic.

The great round table represented a vast arctic snow, with a peaked hummock at its centre, through which emerged the "Great Nial," as the Eskimo people call the pole. To the pole was attached a gigantic menu card.

The dinner guests were in conventional costume, but the waiters were all attired as Eskimos. The diners they served bore appearance to attack their portions of bon-constrictor. This was unfortunate, as the object of the promoters of the "Jungle Dinner" was to prove that many tropical wild animals and reptiles could be cultivated as additions to the existing food supply.

But it was, of course, the dinner-stage setting that was accountable for the great success of the affair. The banquet hall was transformed into a tangled jungle of tropical trees and plants, from which during the progress of the dinner issued strange shrieks, howlings, trumpets and roars that could come only from jungle beasts. The beasts were actually there, too, in the most part cunningly concealed in the jungle foliage.

Now and then a long-necked giraffe poked his head out curiously over the shoulder of a guest, or an elephant's trunk put out a feeler for peanuts or candy. Real live monkeys did gymnastic stunts on swaying branches, laughably imitating the waiters, who were all in monkey costume.

The guests were in helmets and khaki garments, with rifles at their sides, conveying the impression that they were hunters of big game in the jungle. The occasion was none too solemn, although the guests were warned that the dinner was a "Jungle" dinner, and that the guests were to be warned that the dinner was a "Jungle" dinner.

propriate names, such as "Caviar des Bibles," "Truffes de l'Égypte," "Ravioli Polaire," "Bombe des Équinoxes," and so on.

Without considering the enormous expense of the dinner-stage setting, the one by Mr. Kessler about $100 per plate for more than a hundred guests. But the gifts of jewelry for each guest amounted to a great deal more than the food, drink and service. The men received pearl and diamond cuff links, costing about $500 each, and each lady was made happy with diamond earrings worth $1,000.

In one respect—but for sweet charity's sake—Mr. Kessler was guilty of an anachronism. The ice hummocks and sprouted Christmas trees upon whose branches were hung 400 gifts brought from Paris for inmates of the London Home for Crippled Children.

The "Jungle Dinner" given by the French Zoological Society was an idea that delighted the mercantile Parisians. There are still talking about it, though six months have elapsed since favored savants had their fill of ostrich egg omelets, broiled python steak and roast bon-constrictor. The menu also contained most exotic fruits, including porcupine, fire-eater and cactus pudding for dessert.

Several scientists smacked their lips over the broiling of python steak, pronouncing the flavor excellent. A few, however, were tion or by the trumpeting of an indignant elephant.

Inspiration for this Jungle dinner was evidently furnished in the remarkable banquet given by Professor Hens at the Imperial Academy of Sciences at St. Petersburg. The guests were all famous savants, mainly archaeologists, which was appropriate, as the menu contained no article of food less than a thousand years old.

In fact, the piece of resistance was flesh of the prehistoric mammoth, which, Professor Hens estimated, had been in cold storage for not less than 20,000 years.

The officials of the Academy of Sciences had recently obtained from the ice of a river glacier in northeastern Siberia the perfectly preserved remains of a mammoth—so well preserved, in fact, that undigested grass in the stomach of the huge beast showed plainly the character of its last meal a short time before it slipped into a crevice in the river bank, there to be frozen in and embedded in a block of ice that was to remain untouched, except by natural forces, for two hundred centuries.

Before that mammoth skeleton had been found, and this pre-glacial animal had been theoretically reconstructed. But this discovery of the complete animal, bones, flesh and hair was such a marvellous circumstance that the whole world wondered.

Professor Hens was leader of the expedition that dug the mammoth from its ancient ice tomb and transported it to St. Petersburg—well in cold storage. Only the skeleton and hide were useful for preservation in the Imperial Museum, but Professor Hens wished to dissect the carcass and examine it in detail.

During the process it became evident that the ancient beast's flesh was practically the same as on the day 20,000 years before, when it ate its last meal. To taste a bit of it was for Professor Hens to get his hair out of an archaeological banquet.

The mammoth would furnish the roast, so to speak, and it was not difficult to find other "timely" courses—communication with celebrated European archaeologists who were to be guests at the feast found them enthusiastic helpers.

Monsieur Amelinckx, the distinguished Egyptologist, undertook to furnish scorch grain which had been recovered from the pyramids of Egypt to make bread for the banquet. It had been proved that this was good grain, for wheat so found when planted grew like any other.

Wine, fruits and vegetables grown in the period of two or three centuries before the birth of our Saviour were contributed by M. Mollat, Director of the French School of Archaeology in Greece. Wine of a delicious quality had been found in a vault under the ruins of ancient Corinth, a city that had been destroyed by the Roman General Mummius in the year 146 B. C.

Other vaults contained onions, apples and pears, preserved in sealed amphorae. They were somewhat withered, but when subjected to a moist atmosphere they regained both their natural appearance and flavor.

It goes without saying that Professor Hens's archaeological banquet was a triumph—particularly the course of mammoth steak, which all the learned guests declared was agreeable to the taste and not much tougher than some of the sirloins furnished by butchers of to-day.

The dinner tables were the real feature of the "Clock Dinner" recently given in the Free Trade Hall at Leicester, England. The table was formed of perhaps the largest clock dial ever cast—a mass of steel twenty-five feet in diameter and weighing nearly four tons.

This great dial had been made for the clock to tell the time, but it was bought by the Royal Life Society, Liverpool. Laid upon its inner surface at a convenient height from the floor, its solid rim, more than a yard wide, made quite an ideal dining table, and its circumference was great enough easily to accommodate the fifty manufacturing, commercial and transportation nobles who were the invited guests.

Not to be outdone by her husband with his "North Pole Dinner," Mrs. George Kessler chartered a New York restaurant and gave an "Abolition Dinner." The famous Chicago Bears' Yard hardly could have furnished a scene more realistic when Mrs. Kessler had turned that restaurant into the semblance of the refrigerating room of a modern slaughter house.

The floor was covered with sawdust, while white-frosted slicked walls gave the impression of an uncleaned room. Dozens of hidden electric fans made the place as cold as an ice-box. Frosted, white pipes ran around the room to create the illusion of great artificial cold. Even the electric light bulbs were frosted, and every pane of glass that was visible seemed coated with congealed water.

In the centre of the room were three chopping blocks with enormous ox heads on them, while against the walls hung whole halves and quarters of beef and mutton—the real thing. The tables simulated cases of ice, and on each plate heads and raw-pork chops served as pepper and salt receptacles.

The waiters were all dressed in the white duck caps, trousers, jackets and aprons of butchers. The menu was strictly an "abstention"—meat—only beef, mutton and pork being served. Of the former nearly a thousand pounds, mostly in the form of steaks, were served for the guests were not only distinguished in the society and art world, but were numerous. It will be a long time before Mrs. Kessler's "Abolition Dinner" will be forgotten or surpassed for originality.

A dinner yet to be given in New York City should be mentioned here, as it will set the pace for future dinners at which the cost of the table service will be the principal consideration. This will be the first dinner in former United States Senator Clark's $1,000,000 Fifth Avenue mansion, served upon his recently completed $120,000 dinner set consisting of 800 pieces.

Except in some royal palaces there exists probably no larger or more valuable dinner set than this. The order for it was given two years ago, and it is the work of special designers and artisans. The designs are simple, but with the exception of an elaborate monogram of the owner. Each piece is designed to harmonize with the dinner-room decorations and is lined with gold and very heavy brass. There is no doubt that it is the most elaborate and costly dinner service in America.

The first dinner at which it is used will naturally be a grand occasion.

In the case of the "Character Dinner," there is no doubt that it is the most elaborate and costly dinner service in America.

The waiters were dressed to convey the idea that they were all roosters. The dining chairs were made of barrels sawed in half, and the dinner service was in imitation of barnyard utensils. The menu contained "Cora soup," "Hiss a la sauce," "Bones a la Tower" and so on, the names not interfering with the palatability of the dishes. For dessert there were ice cream statues of Rostand.

It was over in the Kaiser's capital city that some German students, steeped in medieval philosophy and in Goethe's "Faust," conceived and carried out the idea of an "Inferno Dinner." to steam as it was passed around in white hot "velins." No wonder the Crown Prince was disappointed at the paternal edict keeping him away from the "Inferno Dinner."

One day last August several drummers for New York wholesale houses chanced to meet in the rathskeller of a famous up-town hotel which occasioned general surprise, as the season usually found them out "on the road" selling their firm's goods. Immediately there was a comparing of notes.

"There were so few orders coming my way," said one, "that my firm ordered me in. Maybe I'm a Jonah—I don't know. What I do know is, it's a rotten year in my line."

"Same here," said another, and showed a telegram from the head of his firm, which read "Come home. You're sure a Jonah."

"A Jonah—that's what my boss called me to my face when I showed up, straight back from Joliet, Mo.," said a third. "And I guess the boss was about right."

Further inquiry showed that a round dozen of the most competent salesmen travelling for New York houses had had the same experience—they had been ordered home as "Jonahs."

As all these men being capable, were retained at their regular salaries until such time as business should improve, the oprobrious term had been applied to them more than half in a spirit of badinage. When the head of one of the largest houses represented heard of the talk above recorded, his sympathies were so moved upon that he offered to give this "Jonah" dozen carte blanche for a dinner.

"Fine," agreed the dozen. "He shall give us a 'Jonah Dinner' in the belly of a whale."

The idea so tickled the heads of several other firms that no expense was spared in equipping a rathskeller room with the wide-open mouth of a gigantic whale, within which the table was set, and where the twelve "Jonahs" dined sumptuously on sea food washed down with white wine from green

Just to show forty young women normal students that a dairy can be kept in an absolutely sanitary condition, a dairymaid near Louisville, Ky., served luncheon between stalls in his abode whose cows are kept.

When the luncheon was over the guests not only told their host but others that they enjoyed the experience and that they were a little surprised how pleasant a cow shed could be made for such an occasion.

Thus came into being the "Cow Shed Dinner," which concludes the catalogue, for the present.

were rescued from the rigging, to which they had been able to cling in a calm sea.

The rescued passengers, being well-to-do residents of Glasgow, for the most part, agreed that this adventure was well worthy of celebration in a "Shipwreck Dinner." Accordingly, with the assistance of the stage manager of a local theatre, they transformed a hotel dining room into the semblance of a sea-cape—the braving rafters floor supporting a table made of spars and cordage of a wrecked vessel.

According to their mutual pledges, the diners wore the identical costumes in which they had been rescued. Two of the ladies, therefore, appeared in markintoshes over lace-trimmed "nighties"—the wreck having covered at night. The men were variously attired, in evening dress, in trousers and underclothes, and in palmans.

The menu included "shrimps" biscuit and canned food—according to all traditions of wrecked voyagers. But good things were not lacking, either—brandy, champagne passed around in a loving cup, in the inverted ship's bell.

It was unanimously voted to repeat the "Shipwreck Dinner" annually, on the date of that memorable disaster.

The "Appendicitis, or Goin'-in, Dinner," happened in Pittsburg, and was proof of the course and sense of humor of Miss Edith Flinn, of that city.

Miss Flinn is the second daughter of William Flinn, whose fortune is estimated at $1,000,000.

Being told by the family physician that she must be operated on for appendicitis, Miss Flinn instantly invited her intimate friends to an "Appendicitis Dinner" at her father's house. The dinner occurred on the night before her admittance to the hospital, so she gave it the subtitle of "Goin'-in Dinner."

Next day Miss Flinn was operated on. Her recovery was speedy and complete.

The C. K. G. Billings "Horseback Dinner," a photograph of which is reproduced on this page, though given several years ago, is included in this list because that was the affair that really started the vogue of the "freak" dinner. While now it would appear at a considerable disadvantage beside such occasions as the "North Pole" Dinner, at that time it was a sensational novelty.

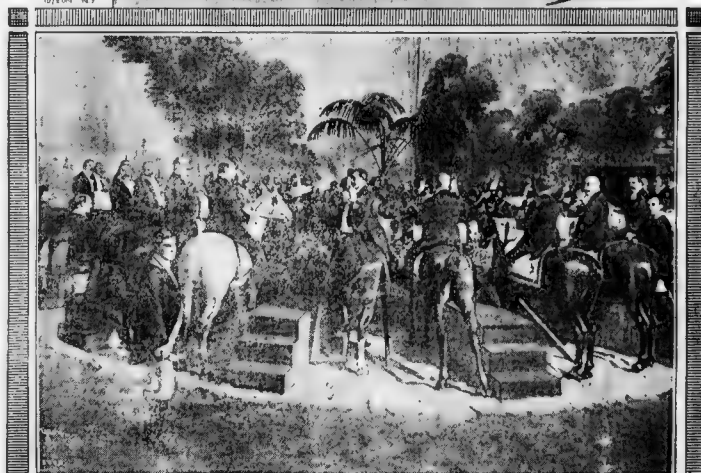

As the photograph shows, the horses on which the guests were mounted faced a sort of horse block table from which the viands were served by grooms. As Mr. Billings and his guests were all of the New York millionaire sportsman set, the horses thoroughbreds of the hunting species, and all the riding costumes, liveries and riding gear of the smartest description, the scene was naturally inspiring and long a subject of adorning comment.

One "freak" dinner that should be mentioned here is a regular annual affair—that of the "Thirteen Club" of New York. As its name indicates, this is an organization of men and women who systematically tempt Fate by dying in the face of familiar uncertainties. They prefer to walk under ladders rather than around them, break mirrors with perfect scotchbale, spill the salt, put up om-

Waiters in diving costumes seemed to emerge from green walls of water in which all sorts of fishes swam—with the aid of a moving picture machine. By the time the party broke up the term "Jonah" had developed into a mark of rare distinction.

The "Shipwreck Dinner," given at Glasgow, Scotland, last June, was realistically commemorative of an actual shipwreck of which the diners had been victims twelve months earlier when the small coasting vessel, Jennie Deans, sprang a leak and foundered on the rocks near the mouth of the Clyde. No lives were lost. A few hours later the crew and the passengers, among them half a dozen young women, members of a pleasure party,

True "Mother Love"

Surprising Instances of the Strength of Maternal Instinct in Cats and Dogs.

ONE of the most pathetic things in nature is the mother love of animals that have been deprived of their own offspring and lavish their maternal affection upon other creatures.

Cats in their heart of hearts have been known to adopt birds and mice and mother them, while dogs have been known to nurse young rabbits, kittens and fox cubs.

On this page are some photographic evidences of this same beautiful mother instinct strangely pervaded.

A sheep dog on a Connecticut farm had four puppies. The farmer heartlessly drowned them all as soon as they were born. The mother dog's grief knew no bounds. She moaned and whined piteously, and followed each member of the family bewailingly.

The little boy of the family was greatly saddened by the tragic grief of his pet and cried himself nearly sick over it. To cheer him up, the farmer permitted him to go with him and some neighbors on a fox hunt. They had discovered the fox's den and went to the place with the idea of killing the fox. They found the den or burrow, and the mother fox with her little cubs. The mother was quickly shot and the little boy begged for a fox cub.

"What are you going to do with him, kid?" the father asked, and the boy answered simply: "I'm going to take him home and nurse him like a mother dog would nurse her puppies." The father let the boy have his way and he carried the little fox cub home with him. The mother fox was in his coat. They had scarcely opened their eyes when the mother fox came and placed the piece of struggling little cub before her. She sniffed at it, and then she licked it. She then she licked it. She then she licked it.

At the Annual Cat Show in New York was exhibited "Pussies" by an orphaned bull terrier, and the devoted cat which had been her mother. One of the judges, upon seeing the cat, exclaimed: "This is a record—only equalled in fact by a litter of kittens in New Jersey which on the death of their mother, adopted a pet rabbit in that capacity."

A most unusual case of perversity of maternal instinct was shown by a cat which adopted two mice after her kittens were taken from her. She would watch them and fondle them and never allowed the best desire to hurt them. They would run all over her or sit perched on her back, seemingly to her perfect delight.

A similar case in this recently came to light in France where a mother cat permitted some pet mice and Java squirrels to play all over and about her, to her distinct delight, as if she would protect and love them.

Perhaps the truest case of all, however, is that of a hen adopting a litter of kittens. The hen had hatched out a dozen chickens, which were promptly taken from her and placed in an artificial brooder.

The hen, a big, motherly Plymouth Rock, seemed distracted over her loss and made a great fuss over the matter. While fussing and fretting, she crossed the lawn and came upon the farm cat with her kittens.

She looked at them deeply interested and tried to drive the cat away from her kittens, and when the cat came near the house, the hen to a possession of the kittens and she started to hover over them. They evidently liked it, for they would lie down under her wings.

She never left the kittens at all.

that day, hovering about even when the mother cat was there. That night she hovered them.

After the kittens were taken from her, she was the more fond of the hen than of the cat, and as soon as they would run to this hen and nestle up to her. Spring a cat on the farm of Albert Fisher, near Watervilla, N. Y., had several small kittens. As the farm was overstocked with cats, her young were taken from her and drowned. After that the cat seemed very unhappy, and being a house favorite, she received considerable sympathy.

One day shortly after her kittens were taken from her a young squirrel which had fallen from its nest in the hollow of a tree was found and taken to the cat with the idea that it would be a dainty morsel to tempt her appetite. But instead of pouncing upon it, she fished at the squirrel and then she carried the squirrel to the box where she had her kittens.

Then, with the squirrel in her mouth, she went to the box and placed it in the nest.

But stranger still, in about two hours the old cat had hatched out the squirrel's nest in a tree some distance away, and had carried the remainder of the young squirrels in her mouth, one at a time, to her box in the house.

Then, with the squirrel in her mouth, she went to the box and placed it in the nest.

A Machine to Measure Character.

A MACHINE for estimating character mathematically has been invented. It is not a catchpenny, fortune-telling affair, but a scientific device founded upon the principle that human character is dependent upon the degree of "persecution" or persistence of the nervous current in the brain.

The inventor is Mr. John Gray, treasurer of the Royal Anthropological Institute of England, who, believing it to be of the highest importance that a teacher should know definitely the character of his pupils if he is to obtain the best results, set to work to perfect a machine for the purpose.

The machine consists of a revolving mirror mounted on an axis, at one end of which is a handle for turning it, and at the other a speed indicator, which tells the number of revolutions the mirror is making at any moment. The object of this device is to measure the "persecution" of the subject.

The mirror, as it revolves, projects two different colors in rapid succession, to the eye of the individual who is being tested. When the mirror is revolved very slowly these colors are seen as a sort of flickering light. But, as the speed increases, the colors gradually fade until at a certain point the flicker entirely disappears, giving way to a steady light, which represents the blending of the two colors.

As the speed is increased, the speed is read from the indicator at the instant when the subject states that the "flicker has disappeared. From the reading of the indicator at this point the "persecution" is ascertained.

When the persecution has been measured in this way its significance is ascertained by reference to a chart in which the various orders of character are scientifically classified.

The two extreme classes on this chart—persons with the highest and the lowest degrees of "persecution"—are likely to suffer from or be predisposed to insanity, but of quite different kinds. Those with the lowest "persecution" are liable to develop acute mania, and those with the highest are liable to melancholia.

The intervening classes represent different kinds of mental character among sane persons.

Reading upward from the lowest class of persecution, one finds that the first class includes cynics and punsters, whom the inventor believes to be persons who can keep their thoughts on one subject for only a short time and who learn a new subject quickly but superficially.

Of a higher order in the scale, who share close ties with persons of great presence of mind, let of daring brilliant literary and scientific persons and persons quick of apprehension. All geniuses, in fact, belong to this class.

Class three embraces the practical, commonsense people—the men who do the great proportion of the useful work in the world. This is the middle class on the scale of character, and includes by far the most people.

Class four is one degree above the average. Persons of a fond of abstract thinking and thorough and profound literary and scientific men, usually come under this class.

Class five shows a very high persecution—so high that it begins to be injurious to the mental character. The class includes persons with one dominating idea, like paranoics, who are obsessed by the idea of persecution at the hands of a particular person.

A thorough test of the device was given at the recent Japanese Exhibition, where Mr. Gray subjected six hundred people to the test. Of the six hundred who thus exposed themselves to mental analysis, the larger number came under the class of "average persecution."

A Pretty Gipsy—The Idol of All Russia.

ASK a Russian, no matter in what quarter of the earth you may find him, if he knows Walsawa, you are quite sure to get your answer in the light which comes into his eyes. His face will assume an expression of mingled longing and pleasure, and his voice will hum the wild strain of a gypsy song. If your Russian be rich, a soldier, and of a sentimental type of mind, he would probably more than thank you if you could lead him to the presence of the woman you have mentioned.

Ten years ago, when the Russian empire was a country estate in the Province of Moscow, Nobok, exactly who her parents were, she had grown up in the village without either mother or father, and when sixteen years old, went to serve at the major house.

The lunatic-like ladies who used to teach the more sensible village girls to sew, as Walsawa was, she had a beautiful voice, and sang the Russian folk songs.

One day a young officer came to see the ladies. His name was Walsawa, and he fell in love with Vera, and asked her if she would like to make a career as a singer in a gypsy chorus in St. Petersburg. The girl who felt restless in the manor, agreed. They went to the capital together, and Walsawa paid for her own journey. Then he got her in a gypsy chorus, and asked his friends to supper in a certain restaurant in the "Isles," a part of St. Petersburg.

When Walsawa invited his guests Vera was the principal singer. She was beautifully dressed in a gypsy costume and her dark hair was arranged in a bun. People still speak of that evening with enthusiasm. Vera sang after supper, and after the night lengthened into morning, her listeners had not had enough. They covered her plate with money and begged her to sing on.

Next evening all the frequenters of the "Isles" were clamoring to hear the new singer, and considerable sums were offered by rival singers to obtain her services. Before many weeks were past Vera sang with her bodies covered with jewels. All St. Petersburg was at her feet.

In the midst of all this success the Russian gypsy war broke out. The singer's husband was ordered to the front. For a while she stayed behind in St. Petersburg, where the festivities of the "Isles" were as brilliant as ever, in spite of serious defeats to the Russian forces in Manchuria. Suddenly Vera Walsawa disappeared.

She was on her way in the seat of war. Some of her admirers immediately overtook her, ordered a magnificent train to be started for her, and declared they would accompany her. She traveled across Siberia with all the eagerness and homage that could be accorded an empress. At every town she stopped in she gave a concert. Rich Siberian merchants, who had been sighing for the joys of St. Petersburg for a decade or two, lavished gifts of gold and jewels upon her with real Russian recklessness. Her train was bedecked by crowds who wanted a word or a smile, and who waited patiently for hours to catch a glimpse of her face.

Her arrival in Manchuria was hailed as if it were some victory over the Japanese. All the wealth she had gained on her way she immediately gave to be distributed among the sick and wounded soldiers. She went to the hospitals and sang to the men there. For her train drove a cannon did more to raise the spirits of officers and men than a supply of cartridges.

Walsawa retained for herself but little. If any of the gold that poured in on her. The bulk of it went to the soldiers, and she returned among her war-weary poorer than she started. The enthusiasm that she was greeted on her return to St. Petersburg was great as the joy with which they had hailed her in Manchuria. She was on giving concert for the victims of the war, and it was no exaggeration to say that she collected millions of rubles for this purpose.

Her husband died from the effects of a wound received in the war and left her a large fortune. Walsawa came, however, to St. Petersburg. She goes from town to town, singing with the gypsy chorus or forming the chief attraction of some grand dual entertainment. She has her hair dressed in a fashionable style and wears dresses of golden tissue when she sings. But her charm is the same with which she dressed in gypsy costume, she has collected millions of rubles for the "Isles."

MY SECRETS OF BEAUTY

No. 105 — NEW YEAR BEAUTY RESOLUTIONS

By Mme. Lina Cavallieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

MME. LINA CAVALIERI believes in New Year resolutions. She advises every woman to make at least one New Year resolve, to neither waste nor neglect her good looks. She suggests as a resolution to lead all the rest: "I will make the most of my good points and do my best to strengthen the weak ones." Another is: "I will never retire without having carefully made my night toilet."

Next week Mme. Cavallieri will discuss "Midwinter Warmings."

"No matter how tired you are never go to bed without having cleansed the face."

steaming of the face, because it does not live that it makes the skin feel and in time causes wrinkles and a haggard appearance about the eyes and chin. But cleanliness is of even more importance than the use of skin and flesh. It is the first secret.

At the first resolution included in the comprehensive one of never neglecting the night toilet, it will sort for thinning the body, such as vapor baths, which may be taken in a cabinet at home if desired; much dieting, which for the stout woman means cutting down the supply of food a third or a half, and avoiding sweet and starchy foods; and keeping the body well lubricated by drinking much water. Gentle and safe laxatives are an aid in reducing flesh, but they should not be taken without first consulting a physician as to the nature of the laxative and the frequency with which it is taken.

If your weakest point is a face that is almost expressionless, give much thought to improving it. A too fat face always lacks expression. Recently an English actor came to America and failed chiefly because his face was of that heavy order which fails to convey any "chagrin" or shade of expression. He utterly lacked facial nuances. A reduction regime is helpful in such a case, for the face is the first to react to such a change of habit. Often the face that has been expressionless reflects thought and emotion when it becomes thinner. It is as though the features had been muffled in a thick veil through which the light did not penetrate. Also by studying your face in conversation, even though it be a soliloquy, before a mirror, you can teach it to light up at the right moment, you can use the right features for the expression of the right thought or emotion. Any intelligent woman can teach herself the needed art of attractive expression, but I will not say it is easily mastered, nor that it does not require much time.

If, on the other hand, the face is too expressive, reflecting the emotions of anger and envy, which it is best to conceal, the face must be brought into submission by the same method, study and experiment before the mirror. If you are so unfortunate as to be a grimace maker, discover the set before the mirror, and cure it there.

I have told you of the extra bath I would give the hands after washing and rinsing them in water. One of these hand lotions is composed of the following:

Glycerine, 1 oz.
Lemon Juice, 1 oz.
Orris, 1 oz.
Glycerine, 1 oz.
Rosewater, 1 oz.
Orris, 1 oz.
Benzoin, 20 drops.

For the night toilet of the hair I may say well if the hair is falling out, to rub a good hair tonic into the scalp. This tonic has been used by many who were troubled about loss of hair, and with excellent results.

Crude oil, 1 oz.
Bay rum, 1 pt.

By Mme. Lina Cavallieri

This is an excellent time to make New Year resolutions for your beauty's sake. Remember that your good looks and every woman has some good looks are a large part of your equipment in the battle of life and that you cannot afford to waste or neglect any of your ammunition.

A good resolution that will help you to make the most of your good points and will do you no harm to others, is the weak ones. This general, or blanket, resolution covers all the others, but since it must be for your own good, it will be well to make some more specific ones.

For instance, I will never retire without having carefully made my night toilet. This resolution is chosen many that are of great importance. For instance,

I will never, no matter how tired I may be, go to bed without having thoroughly cleansed my face. I do not care what the methods of this cleansing, whether you take a stroll with a complexion brush, mild soap and rain water or melted snow, or whether you use the more modern method of clearing the skin with ammoniac cotton dipped into some cleansing and tonic lotion, or whether you rely solely on cold cream for the cleansing. The important thing is that you must not retire with a period of dirt in your pores. You must even steam the face now and then when the pores have a clogged appearance. I am opposed to frequent never retire without having thoroughly washed my hands and cleaned my nails. Health as well as beauty demands this, for the hands on which dust still lingers, being applied to the face where there may be a bruise, or to the eyes or mouth, may cause infection. The daily woman is no more satisfied to wash her hands in one water than she is to have her lingerie laundered in that hasty fashion. She scrubs her hands in warm water with a well-soaped brush, and empties that bowl. She refills the bowl with more fresh, warm water and gives the hands a lighter scrubbing. This done, she rinses them in a third bowl of clean and cooler water. And this is not enough.

"For the night toilet of the hair rub a good hair tonic into the scalp, especially if the hair be unduly falling."

Hands whose skin is soft and white are potent for charm. They are a charm literally within the reach of every woman. No woman should allow them to become red or chapped. To prevent this I always give my hands their second bath in cold water. After washing the hands perfectly clean, as I have described, I always dry them only partially with a towel and then wash them once more in a lotion for which I shall give the recipe on this page. If you do this and wear large, loose gloves, of old kid or rubber, at night, your hands cannot but be soft and white.

Resolve also never to retire at night with the dust of the day clinging to your body. Remove this and the scales that dandruff-like ac-and cleansing lotion from an eyecup, for instance, strong salt water or equal parts of witch hazel and water.

Make this unbreakable resolution: I will not retire without first giving my hair a becoming arch. At the time if you have not the chance at another, give the hair its airing and strengthen the roots by slightly pulling it.

Resolve to brush your eyebrows every night before retiring, to remove the dust from them, and to train them to a becoming arch.

Resolve that the mid-winter winds shall work no havoc in your complexion because you will never go out of doors without masking the complexion with a coat of pure cold cream patting well into the skin and dusting over this cold cream with a pure powder. This is as good protection as a veil, but if you wear a veil too you will be doubly protected.

Resolve—and cling to the resolution—that you will not permit your lips to grow shriveled through neglect to moisten them with cold cream or lip salve before going out into the cold. Withered looking lips detract from the beauty of the loveliest face, from the charm of the most fascinating woman.

Give much attention this New Year to an appraisal of your face and figure and determine to make the most of what are undoubtedly good points and to try to correct the weak ones.

You observe, for instance, that your figure is too thin, that there is the suggestion of hunchback and emaciation about it. Resolve that you will adopt the four best means for plumping the figure, more rest and sleep; more sweets and starchy foods, as puddings and potatoes, more exercise to develop special muscles, as those of the chest walls, the calves and the forearms; and the oil baths for the skin applied with your own hands or by massage.

You note that your figure is too fat, and resolve to reduce your weight by ten or fifteen or twenty pounds. Try the methods accepted as the best for that purpose and persist persistently at them. Much exercise, preferably walking and riding; much bathing of the right
